DOTH SHE TEACH IT?

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY JOSEPH J. GRANT.

In their studies most deficient were the lassies,
In geography, arithmetic and all;
The van they led in all the college classes;
Could parse, decline, the youthful males appall.
The spelling book could rattle off with vigor,
The history knew—astronomy, divorce;
Dear pretty ones, their writings, too, were splendid,
Philosophy they studied, too, of course.

Would boast of this their mistress, daily, nightly,
Most constantly, unceasingly she praised
Their merits, and conjectured she but rightly,
When thought she scholars such could ne'er be raised.
Heard of this thing a sportive city jester,
A writer, fighter, rower, jolly sport,
And 'termined he to probe this Madam Esther,
He cut up capers of the jolly sort!

He started on his journey on the morrow,
With promise of most laughing news to tell,
Of fact did some neat expressions borrow,
Then started for the school in Robindell.
He at the place arrived, made application
For admission to the tutoress so wise,
A lady known by learned appellation
Of Madame Esther Lucy Scholardize.

His desire she inquired most abruptly:
Could he believe his eyes, why she so rude?
Astonishment soon ceased, and then replied he,
With tongue of one who easy could delude:
"Thy pardon beg I, madam; no intrusion
Hope I this visit will be looked upon;
But, true, am I o'ercome with such confusion,
I prithee, of me do not think it wrong."

"'Tis well enough," said she, with condescension,
In which detected he a prided sneer,
"As guilty thou may'st think me of detention,
There's the door, sir, prithee thro' it disappear!"
"Pray, stay thy anger, madam, do but hear me,
And I thy humble servant e'er shall be,
'Tis a question would I ask of education,
Dost teach thy girls 'Shoo Fly, Don't Bodder Me?'"

THE TEMPTED SISTERS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NORA," "SHE WOULD BE AN ACTRESS," &c., &c.

"I am coming to it," he went on. "They were married; her husband did not treat her well; she died in a year, leaving a child (her living image). My wish for revenge was dying away, for I had loved her dearly with all her falseness, when one night, in a gaming house in Paris, I met with her husband, the man who had robbed me of her. I heard him recount to one of his boon companions the story of his courtship, and dwell with maudlin triumph on his victory over a boy. He did not know me, and again I swore to be revenged. I waited; two years passed—I had risen in the world, and he, proscribed, had fled the country. I followed him to England. Under an assumed name I obtained the entree to his mansion. I became his friend. I found out all his secrets, saw his child. I soon found that my friend's residence was little better than a common gaming house, and introduced to him men with no scruples, till, step by step, he sank from the position he held to one of abject poverty. Do you like my story, Pauline? Shall I tell you the names of that father and daughter?"

"There is no need," said Pauline, and there was a strange look in her face, as if some light were gradually breaking in upon her mind. "I have heard something of your story before," she continued, "and though you tell it so glibly, you are not the man. No! Hubert Lannay, I begin to know you now. And as there is a heaven above me, which you have taught me to doubt, I will find out the truth."

The form of the beautiful girl dilated as she spoke, and her flashing eye turned upon the man at her side with withering contempt.

"As you please," he said with apparent sang froid, though a keen observer might have detected a slight spasm on his features. "I am not in your power yet, but remember, Pauline de Cressey, you are in mine. Find out what you like, but you shall marry me first. Give me here your written promise to be my wife in one month from this date, or the words will be spoken ere twenty-four hours pass away which shall consign your father to a prison, and send you friendless into the world. So choose. You know what the inside of a prison is like; how, think you, will your father enjoy it?"

"Oh, fiend! monster!" exclaimed Pauline, rising. "But you shall have your will. I will marry you, and as sure as you stand there so sure will I too have my revenge. I will find you out, fathom your dark secrets to their blackest depths, and make you wish some day that the earth had swallowed you rather than you had seen Pauline de Cressey."

She walked rapidly to the table as she finished speaking, and ere Lannay had recovered from his astonishment at the sudden outbreak she placed in his hand a written paper.

"Will that do?" she said. "If not, dictate."

He opened the paper and read:—

"I, Pauline de Cressey, hereby promise to marry Hubert Lannay within the space of one month, on condition of his never using the knowledge of certain facts detrimental to Hugh de Cressey (my father), and of his destroying certain papers in his possession relative to the said facts."

"That will do," he said. "And now for my part of the compact."

He took from his pocket book three slips of paper having the appearance of bills.

"There, destroy them yourself," said he.

Pauline took the papers and looked at them earnestly; then, walking to the fireplace, she lit a taper, and, setting them on fire, watched them intently till they were consumed. Lannay looked at her with a sneer in his face and a half smile on his lip, and when she had done:—

"Come, now, my wife that is to be, sit down; I have not done talking to you yet. Come, I have a right to you now, my queen of beauty," and he passed his arm around the waist of Pauline and imprinted a kiss upon her lips.

She shrank from him, in spirit, with indignant loathing, but she felt she was in his power and she endured in silence.

"Do you ever think of the days you spent in C—— street, Pauline?" he said.

"Do I think of them?" she exclaimed. "Aye, I do think of them, for I was happy then—happier in our poverty and toil than I am amid all these gauds. I sometimes feel as if their weight would crush me to the earth."

"Yes, you were happy and innocent then, no doubt," sneered Lannay; "happy in your hard labor, and, alas! that I should have to say it, in your unrequited love."

"Hold, sir!" she exclaimed. "If my love was unrequited he never knew it. I never sank so low as to ask the love I could not win. Henry Audley served me nobly, truly, and if I loved him, he was worthy the love of a queen—is worthy if he be still alive."

"If to be still alive?" said Lannay, with a laugh. "What would you say if I were to tell you that I have seen him within a month, alive and well, and a great man to boot."

Pauline's heart gave a sudden bound.

"Alive! alive!" she murmured.

"Yes, alive!" continued Lannay, "and affianced to a rich heiress as lovely as yourself, my darling."

He accompanied the words with a caress, which this time she indignantly repulsed, and an exclamation of misery arose to her lips, which was checked by the entrance of her father. Hugh de Cressey came to summon his daughter to the carriage, which waited at the door. He was followed by Pauline's maid, Lucie, who carried her cloak and overshoes.

She noticed the agitation visible in the face of her mistress, and gave a glance at Lannay, who returned it by a look of intelligence. She said nothing, but arranged the cloak over her young lady's shoulders, and put on the shoes with an air of great deference; then, turning to her, said:—

"Has mademoiselle any orders?"

"See that the lace dress I tore last night is repaired and go to Storr & Mortimer's with my opal bracelet—that is all," and, taking the arm of her father, she left the room.

The door is opened for them by one obsequious footman, the steps of the carriage are let down by another, while the box is occupied by the stateliest of fashion, able coachmen, who, with his wig and silk stockings, thinks as much of himself as any lord in the land. What do these servile lacqueys think of their master? Do they respect him as much as they fawn upon him? Do they honor him as the millionaire, or laugh at him as the parvenu?

Has any little bird whispered to them about the second floor in C—— street? Do they ever picture to themselves a wounded man moaning and tossing on an humble bed, with a self-inflicted gash in his throat, and a young lady dragged to prison and figuring in a police court? These thoughts often haunt the mind of Hugh de Cressey, as he rolls along in his splendid carriage; yet how many envy him as they recognize him as he passes.

There is no trace of former days left about him now. Tall, of noble bearing, always faultlessly dressed, with the looks and manners of a gentleman, he is everywhere courted for his reputed wealth, and received as an acquisition to the society in which he moves. He is singularly handsome, but his face betrays no power, and there is a lack of spirit in the eye and an appearance of irresolution about his mouth that spoil the otherwise fine contour of his face.

He is evidently a nervous man, as shown by the wandering of his eye, and constantly turning of the head, as if in expectation of something, and he has a trick of constantly touching the high stock which he wears, that is often remarked. It is merely a habit in the eyes of the world, but it brings volumes of memory back to Pauline, as she watches him on the way.

The party was a brilliant one; Lord and Lady Arlington warmly greeted the lovely girl, whose rare beauty was the theme of general admiration, and her ladyship entered into conversation with Pauline, whose brilliancy she admired and secretly envied, for she was herself one of the inanimate order of women, with a mind scarce removed from a child's, though amiable.

Lord Arlington meanwhile talked to her father, and, after a few trivial sentences, Pauline heard him say:—

"From what I hear society will have a lovely addition ere long, in the person of a fair daughter of yours."

"Yes," replied Hugh De Cressey. "My Blanche comes home in a few days, but society will not have her long. She is to be married shortly."

"Oh, who to?" put in her ladyship. "I hope she makes a good match."

Pauline smiled rather scornfully as she replied:—

"Oh, no. A love in a cottage sort of affair; our Blanche has no notions beyond the little country place where her uncle lives. She is completely uninformed."

"Got plenty of money, though," drawled a pale, effeminate looking young man at the farther end of the room.

"Yes, and beauty too, I hear," said a lady to Pauline.

"My sister is very lovely," she answered, "and will be very rich."

"Aye, far richer than her sister here," said her father.

"Not one whit more lovely, though, I am sure," said Lord Arlington, bowing gallantly to Pauline; "but you did not enlighten us, Miss De Cressey, as to the name of the happy individual your sister has honored with her choice."

"Call it honor if you will," said Pauline, "at any rate he is well enough known. She marries Gilbert Bertram."

"Gilbert Bertram!" was the general exclamation; and his lordship added:—

"I think that is an honor; but perhaps you do not know him?"

"I have never seen him," she answered, "and, of course, my sister's eulogiums have had due allowance made them."

"Then you do not know that he toiled for years in poverty and obscurity to redeem his father's credit, who died a bankrupt," resumed his lordship, "and that he has won for himself not only honorable wealth, but an honorable name. This is a proud position, young lady, and your sister may well be envied, as I have no doubt she is, by hundreds."

Pauline felt the force of his words, and she bent her head in acquiescence and replied:—

"She may, indeed."

"It's a dayvellish lucky chance for him to fascinate such a wich young lady," said the young man who had spoken before. "Do you know, Miss de Cwessey, I knew him when he had hardly a coat to his back? He used to wite for the magazines and things."

What was there in the face of the speaker that sent a sudden chill to Pauline's heart? Where had she seen him before? What was it that brought back to her mind like a picture that fearful night of such awful horror that a thousand years would not blot it from her memory?

As she looked at him she seemed to stand again in the felon's dock, and to hear the half suppressed hum of that crowded court. She looked at the speaker's face, but could not recollect that ever she had seen it before, and he went on:—

"He was not Gilbert Bertwam then. Let me see—what did he call himself? William? John? No, I can't wemember. I'm not good at names; but he was vewy seedy—lived in a dingy stweet the wong side of the water."

Pauline started; a dim light was beginning to break in upon her mind. By this time the greater part of the company were listening, interested in anything relating to such an established favorite of the public as Gilbert Bertram; and she suppressed the exclamation that rose to her lips. A gentleman asked with a smile:—

"What could the Hon. Augustus Fitzchapman have to do with a dingy street the wrong side of the water?"

"May not a fellow go where he likes? I know some one there," was the somewhat sulky answer.

"Certainly, my dear fellow," the speaker said, with a laugh. "But what about Gilbert Bertram?"

"Oh, I didn't know much about him, but I wemember him by a deuced odd thing that once happened in the house where he lived."

"What was it?" said several voices, and the Hon. Augustus went on:—

"I had been having a spwee one night—beg pardon, ladies, but a spwee means lots of fun, you know."

"Oh, we'll pardon you," said Lady Arlington, "we know you. Go on."

"And I was making for Rome. I was going up the Waterloo woad and I stopped to talk to a bobby—a policeman, you know—and all at once we heard such a wow and we wan down the stweet (I don't wemember the name of it), and when we came to the place evewybody was shouting 'murder' and 'fire,' and all that sort of thing."

"Your story is remarkable for its perspicuity, Gus. Is it not Miss de Cressey?" said Lord Arlington.

Pauline felt as if she were turning to stone, and the speaker's voice seemed as if it came from a long distance. She roused herself, however, and, finding that her father was not among the listeners, replied:—

"Wonderfully so, my lord," and nerved herself to hear what followed.

"Hang it," said Gus, as his lordship called him, "don't intewup a fellow. When we got into the house there was a little girl all bedabbled with blood, in fits at the bottom of the stairs, and a man with his thwoat cut at the top of the house."

"Oh, Gus, you are romancing," said Lady Arlington.

"No, on my soul," said he, "ask Gilbert Bertwam when you see him—he was there."

"My dear Miss de Cressey, what is the matter?" he exclaimed, as the deathlike paleness of Pauline's face caught his eye.

"Nothing," said she, and her lips formed themselves into a smile, though her face was as wan as that of a corpse.

"Take care," said his lordship. "You should not tell such horrible stories before ladies—their nerves won't stand it."

"I know my nerves didn't stand what I saw that night," said the young gentleman; "it made me ill for weeks when I thought of it. Gilbert Bertwam lived there with his mother, and he was mixed up in it somehow, and there was a twial, and they accused the child of murder, and Bertwam——"

An exclamation from the group of ladies interrupted him. Pauline had sunk back upon the sofa in a fainting fit. The agitation she had undergone before leaving home, and the stunning revelation she had just heard, had completely overcome her. She knew all now. All hope was lost.

For years she had hoped and prayed for a meeting with Henry Audley, and it was come at last. In a few days she would meet him whose love she had so toiled to win—and how? As the successful author of the society in which she herself was moving, and—oh, bitter thought!—the accepted lover of her younger sister. And Blanche, in her far away country home, gained the only heart in the world that she thought worth the winning? All hope was over, and from that time Pauline hated her innocent sister with a bitter hatred, such as only a jealous woman can feel.

The bustle consequent upon her indisposition attracted her father's attention; he came forward and only learned that she had heard some terrible story, and he apologized for her, saying she was not well when she left home. She soon recovered, and, saying she was truly ashamed of herself, insisted upon joining the company at dinner, though Lady Arlington begged her to remain in the drawing room, and would even have stayed with her. The Hon. Augustus was very attentive, as if he would fain remedy the mischief he had caused so unwittingly.

Pauline faintly remembered his face as that of one of the spectators of what passed on that night, and she was glad to find that, thanks to his aristocratic memory and her own altered appearance, he had no recollection of her. The dinner seemed frightfully long, and she excused herself as early as possible, on the plea of illness, which was evident to all. She resolved not to tell her father, for she knew he would be likely to betray his identity with the hero of the honorable gentleman's story, and she resolved to communicate what she had heard to no one but Lannay.

Had Gilbert Bertram been any other than the man she had so dearly loved, or had the object of his choice been any other than Blanche, she would have kept it to herself; but the worst passions of her heart were roused, and she thirsted for revenge—on him—on her—on all the world for her disappointment. When she appeared in the breakfast room the next morning Lannay was already there, and when the urn was removed and they were alone, she recounted to him the story she had heard the preceding evening.

"She shall not marry him, Lannay!" she exclaimed, pacing the room with burning cheeks and flashing eyes. "She shall not marry him! What can he see in her or in her baby beauty?"

"He shall not marry her," he answered. "I owe this same great man a debt he little dreams of, and your sister too."

"I do not understand you," said Pauline.

"Perhaps not," was the reply. "I'll enlighten you. Last summer I happened to hear of a certain rich heiress in the west. It was before I did you the honor of offering you my hand, my sweet Pauline."

"Oh, go on," said she; "what matters it? before or since! I know you; I believe you are a fiend in human shape."

"These mutual compliments will avail us nothing, my charmer," he interrupted. "You would be revenged on him, I on her. You cannot marry him, for you are engaged to me."

"Go on," again said Pauline, with a look of withering scorn, "if your story is not a romance, like the one you treated me to last night."

"You can ascertain the truth from the fair Blanche herself," he answered, with a sneer. "I thought I should like her and her money, which I stood much in need of, so I went to Stonehurst to see her. I scraped acquaintance with her uncle, and all went on swimmingly till this great man, this Gilbert Bertram came, and then, hey presto! the scene changed, as if by the touch of a wizard's wand. I got the cold shoulder most emphatically. I know he said something about me, and I will make him smart for it."

"Yes," said Pauline, "but how?"

"I have an idea," said Lannay, "but not perfected. I'll wring his heart for him. And as for her, he shall cast her off; and then——"

"And then what?" said she.

"Oh, that's my secret!" he returned, "and not even to be told to my wife."

CHAPTER VI.

THE SEARCH—THE OPEN DOOR—THE HEADLONG FALL—THE DARK CLOSET—THE CONCEALED WINDOW—THE RESCUE.

We now return, with an author's privilege, to the household of Mr. Hilton, which we left in a state of the utmost confusion—fire raging on every side, and Blanche—the cherished, idolized Blanche—nowhere to be found.

The terrified servants ran hither and thither in frantic fear, while Gilbert Bertram, calling wildly on the name of his beloved one, sought in every apartment in vain. Lannay accompanied his host to bear his mother to a place of safety, and then assisted with apparent zeal in the search.

Walter, an old servant of the family, busied himself in preserving his master's papers, and some of the family plate, from the flames, which were rapidly spreading. The whole front of the house was now one mass of fire, and still Gilbert, careless of his own safety, was once more traversing the rooms in search of Blanche.

A crash and a shout from the crowd outside warned him of his danger, and, returning to descend, he found the staircase had fallen in, and that his escape was cut off. Fire was everywhere around him—no hope, no refuge; death seemed inevitable. For that he cared not; life was nothing without Blanche, and he was resigning himself calmly to what appeared to be his dreadful doom, when suddenly, as if it had been by some inspiration, he thought of his mother.

Ah! there was something to live for yet—his widowed mother alone in her far off home, perhaps even then thinking of, praying for her absent son. His mother! She who had watched his progress through life with such unfaltering interest; whose looks and tones of encouraging love had often spurred his sinking spirit when he faltered in his self-imposed task; she suddenly became, as it were, a visible presence, and Gilbert felt that for her sake he must not throw away his life.

The people below shouted to him directions which he could not hear or understand in the confusion, and he retreated to the passage where, if he could not escape, he would at least die unseen. He gained the corridor, on which the bed-rooms opened, and found it full of suffocating smoke, and the Indian matting that covered the floor burning with a peculiar aromatic smell that was perceptible even amid the smoke and flame of the rapidly consuming house.

He gazed around him with a bewildered feeling, for the smoke and heat were overpowering him. He saw the bed-room doors, through two of which the flames were rapidly pouring, and he retreated to the end of the passage, with the kind of instinctive clinging to life which remains till life itself is almost gone.

Beside the room so lately occupied by his host was a door which he had imagined to be merely a cupboard in the wall; the flames had not yet touched it, and he leaned against it, thinking it was fastened, when, to his utter amazement, it gave way, and he stumbled into a dark place, and fell headlong over some obstacle, just as the floor upon which he had so lately stood fell in, and left him in utter darkness.

A shout of pity and terror rose from the spectators, while Mr. Hilton, almost frantic with despair, was scarcely to be restrained from rushing into the blazing heap in search of his lost darling.

"No use, no use, dear master," said his faithful old servant, who had himself twice narrowly escaped death during the brief scene which seems so long in a description.

"Dear Miss Blanche is an angel now."

"Nothing could be there and live," and the tears coursed down the old man's cheeks as he thought of the lovely girl, doomed in the spring of her fair, joyous life, to such a dreadful end.

He tried to draw his master away from the scene, but in vain; he seemed dead to every feeling but the almost insane wish to find his niece and his guest, whom he loved as a son, and who had shared her fate while searching for her.

Meanwhile, the lookers on were speculating on the origin of the fire, whether the property was insured, with all the topics of conversation common on such occasions.

"The old man is sure to be all right," said one. "Oh ay," said another; "he knows how to take care of himself."

All, however, concurred in lamenting the fate of the poor girl whom they supposed lost. Blanche was universally beloved. Her simple, unaffected manners, her constant charity, regulated wisely by her uncle, together with her innocent loveliness, made her a favorite with young and old, and there was hardly a man present who would not have entered those blazing ruins in search of her had they not known that what Walter said was true.

"Nothing could be there and live."

Many a strong man felt his heart swell as he recollected how often that gentle hand had ministered to the comfort of his wife and little ones. Many a mother's eyes were dimmed with tears as she recollected the lovely girl, whose presence in her humble cottage seemed to bring warmth and comfort where misery and despair had been before. Lannay had helped all he could in saving valuables from the flames, which still raged with fury among the ruins. Mr. Hilton was anxiously inquiring after him.

He was informed that he had been seen scarce a minute before among the crowd, none of whom seemed to care much for the fate of the "Mounseer," as they called him, for Stonehurst was one of those primitive places where old English customs still existed in full force; where "Bonney's" name was still used as a bugbear to frighten refractory children, and where all Frenchmen were looked upon as a frog eating, treacherous race, and the worthy folk wondered much that Mr. Hilton should receive, as a guest, any one from "furrin parts," forgetting that the husband of his sister, whom they still remembered with love, and the father of "dear Miss Blanche," was a Frenchman.

Lannay had left the crowd at a signal from the man with whom he had held such evil counsel that evening, and who was present in a carter's frock and a red wig. The pair turned down a narrow lane not far from the house in earnest conversation.

"Well," said Lannay, as his companion had said to him but a few hours before.

"As you remarked to me this evening, it is not at all well," said Gustave, "but before you talk any more put on these."

And pulling off his frock, which was long and wide, he handed it to Lannay, together with a pair of overalls and an old hat, which he produced from the large pocket of a kind of shooting jacket he wore beneath.

"Tush, man!" said Lannay, impatiently.

"Better be prepared for anything," replied his companion, hastily assisting to disguise him.

"Think you we could work together much longer if the handsome, gentlemanly visitor of the respectable Mr. Hilton were seen in private conversation with a suspicious individual, who lives no one knows how?"

"True, true," replied Lannay. "But how about the girl? Where is Blanche?"

Gustave pointed to the mass of smoke and flame in the distance and replied:—

"Yonder."

"Oh, horror!" exclaimed Lannay.

Then, turning to Gustave:—

"Pooh, pooh, man, you are joking."

His friend made no reply. Lannay stamped with rage.

"Fool—fool that I was," said he. "I should have done it myself. But where did you leave her? She was not in her room. And how came there fire in two places at once?"

"Don't talk so loud, the very hedges have ears sometimes," Gustave replied. "You know you let me in, according to our agreement, and showed me the room."

Lannay assented.

"And then went back to bed, and left me to be taken up, if I were caught," continued he.

"According to our agreement, my dear fellow," said Lannay; "but go on."

"I found the door of the girl's chamber open, thanks to you, and she was luckily asleep. There was a dim light burning, but I caught my foot in something on the floor and stumbled; she woke and started up in bed, but I had her down before she had time to make much noise, and I stuffed a handkerchief into her mouth, and tied another over it to keep her quiet; then I rolled the blankets round her so that she should not move."

"Good heaven! you did not smother her, did you?" said Lannay.

"Ah! no; I only made a bundle of her, that I might carry her easily," said Gustave. "The cord I had with me soon made her arms and legs fast, and a touch of my hand sent the little spirit lamp over the toilet table, which was in a blaze in a moment. I had no time to lose, so I just lifted my young lady up, and was on the top step of the stair when I heard a noise in the old man's room, and I got into the empty closet (which you have found so convenient, you know), to listen. In less than a minute the whole house was roused, and I had to make my escape in the confusion. I think no one saw me but that man Walter; I thought he was going to give chase, but they were all so much absorbed in seeking for Miss Blanche that I was not noticed, and any description that he might give of me would not suit me now."

Lannay, all evil as he was, shuddered at the cool manner in which his companion in crime spoke of leaving a fellow creature to perish in such a dreadful way.

"Oh, villain—monster!" he exclaimed. "Did you not try to save her?"

"I had far too much regard for my own safety," was the reply. "Would you have had me carry the girl through the house rolled up like a mummy? Why, it would put both our necks in peril."

"Not both," said Lannay. "No one could accuse me."

"Not so fast," returned the other. "If I were searched there would be found on my person a letter from a certain Pierre Dupont, inviting me to England, and, in fact, very explicit as to what I was wanted for. I mean to keep that document—it may be useful."

"Never!" muttered Lannay. And Gustave turned round to see in the semi-obscurity the bright glitter of a knife, and just in time to catch the uplifted arm.

"Don't be hasty, my dear fellow; you know a murder makes such a noise in the world!"

"Don't provoke me, then," said Lannay.

"I didn't want to provoke you, only to let you know we row in the same boat," Gustave replied. "But where's the will—have you got it?"

"No," said Lannay. "I was foiled, I verily believe, by that smooth-tongued Gilbert Bertram. The will, and a lot of other papers, went to the old man's lawyer yesterday morning. He said so at the dinner table, and while he was napping or reading down stairs, I took the liberty of looking for myself. It is gone, but I will have it yet. Curses on them all! I am foiled at all points."

"Not quite, you are rid of one great stumbling-block at last," said Gustave.

A loud, triumphant shout interrupted their conversation, and hasty footsteps were heard approaching, and the two stepped under the shadow of the hedge and listened.

"Eh! Burnt to a cinder, sure?"

"Not a bit of it; both alive and likely to do. Hooray!" and with a shout as if their throats would crack, a party of rustics passed the spot where Lanny and his companion stood.

Not dead! Both alive! What could they mean? Had a miracle been performed to rescue Blanche from her fiery death? They looked at each other in amazement. Gustave was the first to speak.

"You had better be off, to be ready for what may turn up," he said; and, making an appointment when and where to meet again, Lannay divested himself of his disguise and took his way back to the scene of the fire.

He found every one in strange excitement; the words "they are saved" met his ear on every side; and he took his way to the parsonage, whither they had been conveyed, with a smiling face, but with bitter curses in his heart. When Gilbert Bertram stumbled over the obstacle which lay in his way he lost all consciousness for a few moments.

When he recovered he found that his hands touched the wall opposite the door by which he had entered, and which he now vainly endeavored to open. He felt the object over which he had fallen, and his heart leaped with a sudden thrill when he recognized the unmistakable outlines of a human form beneath the thick wrapping in which it was enveloped.

To feel for the head, to tear off with a strong hand the covering of the mouth, was the work of a moment, and with a wild, agonized cry of "Blanche," he knelt beside the inanimate form.

Her face was cold and she seemed lifeless—doubtless suffocated. Who could have done this? What motive could any one have for such an outrage?

One name alone flashed into his mind—Lannay. But then—his reason for it.

"I will find out," he murmured, "if heaven spares me," and his heart went up in an earnest, passionate prayer for help.

He again tried to open the door; but alas! to no purpose. The framework had partially given way, and jammed it in such a manner that it resisted all his efforts; and if he had opened it—what then?

The flooring had fallen in, and the whole area of the house was one burning heap. No one could get over the livid mass; and with sickening despair he turned away. He raised the senseless form of Blanche from the ground, and, imprinting kiss after kiss upon her cold lips, tried to rouse her to life. His efforts were useless.

"Better so," he said, "than rouse her to die in pain and fear. Oh, Blanche! Blanche!" and, taking the deathlike form in his arms, he seated himself on the floor to await the death that seemed inevitable, for he could hear by the crackling of the fire that it had not subsided.

The heat of the small closet (for such it evidently was) where they were imprisoned was insupportable, and Gilbert felt that his senses were fast forsaking him. Strange voices sounded in his ears, and strange shapes seemed to flit before his eyes in the darkness, while his brain reeled like that of a drunken man.

As he leaned his head back it encountered something smooth, and, starting up and feeling, Gilbert found with a joy that was almost overwhelming that there was a window in the place. He opened it with difficulty, for the fastening was rusty with long disuse; no light appeared, and, thinking the darkness was caused by the shutters, he felt for the fastening.

There were no shutters there! His hands encountered the cold, unyielding surface of a brick wall! The window had been built up! In a paroxysm of grief and disappointment he beat against it with his hands, and shouted, and as he did so some tiny pieces of mortar fell on him.

He felt a second time and found two of the bricks were loose. He had a knife in his pocket, and with a determined hand he proceeded to scoop away the mortar; in a little while one brick was out, and, oh joy, never to be forgotten! he felt the night air blowing on his face.

The slight wall which concealed the window was only one brick in thickness, and soon another brick was down, falling this time on the shoulder of a policeman who was watching a heap of miscellaneous articles hastily collected at the back of the house. The man looked up as Gilbert, with one vigorous push, sent half the brickwork crushing on the grass beneath and shouted for a ladder.

The policeman, recognising him, gave a hearty shout of congratulation, and, bidding him be careful, for the wall was unsafe, sprang his rattle to summon his comrades. The news spread like wildfire among the crowd in the front, and eager hundreds pressed to the back of the house to aid in the rescue.

The escape was soon on the spot, and, amidst cheers, which roused the country for miles, Blanche and Gilbert were brought down from their perilous prison. Various were the surmises as to the cause of the outrage upon Blanche, and Lannay, as he stood among the spectators, listened to many a rustic threat of vengeance upon the perpetrator of it, should he be caught.

She was conveyed to the parsonage amid tears of joy at her deliverance, attended by an eager crowd, who besieged the door until assured by Walter that his dear young lady still lived; when, with many a heartfelt blessing upon, and fervent prayers for her safe recovery, they departed to while away the time in their hour of work, and discuss among themselves all that had happened.

Meanwhile, Blanche, in the hands of anxious friends and careful nurses, was slowly returning to consciousness. Gilbert stood beside her sofa, watching her every breath till, with a gentle sigh, she opened her eyes. She looked earnestly at him, smiled, and sank into what appeared to be a deep slumber.

The hastily summoned surgeon directed she should be left in perfect quiet, and when she woke be removed to bed, as he was apprehensive of fever. The minister's wife remained to watch beside her, while Mr. Hilton and Gilbert retired with thankful hearts to seek the rest they so much required. The apprehensions of the doctor were unfounded. Blanche awoke the next morning very weak and unable to leave her bed, but with her mind perfectly collected. She could give no explanation of what had happened to her; she only remembered seeing the man in her room and his placing his hand on her mouth; after that all was a blank to her.

The affair, altogether, was inexplicable. Mr. Hilton was under the impression that he was the author of the fire. He told Gilbert that, having sat late looking over some papers, he was preparing to go to bed when he heard what seemed a smothered scream, and, starting up in his alarm, he overturned his candle and the papers were instantly in a blaze.

Not being able to extinguish them, he opened his door to give the alarm, when he felt a man brush by him towards the staircase, and saw fire issuing from under the door of Blanche's room. This was all he could tell about the affair, which now seemed more mysterious than ever.

Lannay listened to the story and wondered with the rest, and after breakfast took his leave to return to London, charged with many messages to Blanche's father and sister, whom she was about to visit. In a few days the healthy constitution of the young girl triumphed over the terrible shock she had received, and she was again among her friends, paler than before, but as lovely as ever.

Mr. Hilton made arrangements for his mother to remain with her kind friends at the parsonage while he made a short visit to London, and about a week after the fire started from Stonehurst with Gilbert and Blanche, their hearts filled with thankfulness and joy at their almost miraculous escape.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLIE CLIFFORD.

Admiring nature, in her wildest grace,
These western scenes with weary feet I trace;
O'er many a winding dale and painful steep,
The abode of covey'd grouse and timid sheep,
My savage journey curious I pursue,
Till far-famed Salt Lake opens to my view—
The meeting cliffs each deep sunk glen divides,
The woods, wide scattered, clothe their ample sides.

The stretching lake, embosom'd 'mong the hills,
The eye with wonder and amazement fills;
The city slumbering sweet in infant pride,
The Temple rising on its verdant side,
The lawns wood-fringed in nature's native taste;
The hillocks drop'd in Nature's careless haste!
The arches striding o'er the new-born stream,
The city, glittering in the noontide beam.

Here Posey might wake her heaven-taught lyre,
And look through nature with creative fire;
Here, to the wrongs of fate half reconcil'd,
Misfortune's lightened steps might wander wild;
And disappointed in their lonely bounds,
Find balm to soothe her bitter, rankling wounds;
Here heart-struck grief might heavenward streich
And injured worth forget and pardon man.

WHIPPING MACE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Brown was in business in Boston. Brown was visiting New York on business connected with his business in Boston. B. was a large man; the ladies said he was not exactly handsome, but fine looking. Brown wore kid gloves of the smallest possible size consistent with his large hands; kept his boots blackened; considered paper collars vulgar, and wore a stovepipe hat. Brown was brave, cool, determined; never allowed any one to infringe upon any right of his, real or imaginary. He had finished his affairs in New York, so, purchasing a twenty-five cent cane from the vender in front of the Astor House, started off for the Boston depot. Brown was a thoughtful fellow, too, so he sauntered through the cars until he found two rather pretty young ladies. Establishing himself in the seat immediately in front of that occupied by the ladies, as soon as the train was clear of the depot he commenced advances, with the view of making his trip as agreeable as possible by inquiring, with his blandest tones and most engaging smile, if the sun was not annoying, and if the ladies would like the under shade raised; "it would not be the least trouble, a pleasure rather," said the agreeable Brown. An inspiring "Would you be so kind?" from the prettiest of the two girls acted on Brown like the opening of the throttle valve on a locomotive—it set him in motion. In order to facilitate the raising of the window, he tipped the back of his seat over and forgot to tip it back again after adjusting the shade.

Twenty-five miles further on Brown would not have taken $5 for his presumptive right to that seat. He joked, he laughed, he became inspired, until, seized with the desire to be yet more agreeable, he left the cars in quest of something in the way of lunch at one of the stations. This was the death warrant of Brown's hopes; scarcely had he got fifty yards from the train when whoop! and off it was. Two gentlemen on the rear platform took advantage of the fact, Brown to bet a supper for two that he did not catch the train. The backer of Brown won; he did catch it, and was assisted on the platform by the winner in a decidedly overcome condition, with a face entirely too red to think of presenting himself to the ladies. Oh! no, that would never do for the elegant Brown; he must wait until he cooled off, and give his blood time to settle down to its wonted pace, so he staid on the platform. Whilst Brown was cooling, a rather good looking young man, somewhat above the medium stature, with a muscular looking frame and a moustache, sauntered into the car, and, seeing an unoccupied seat, turned the back the reverse of what he found it, and proceeded to make himself comfortable. Having at last got cool, readjusted his necktie and re-established his confidence in his shirt collar, it started for his seat. Seeing it occupied he walked up to the intruder, and, assuming his blandest tone, said:—

"I regret sir, troubling you, but this is my seat."

"Certainly, sir," said moustache, and he moved closer to the side of the car to allow room on the seat for his interlocutor.

"Allow me to explain," continued Brown, with even more suavity. "That seat was reversed when I left it. I am with those ladies; you will certainly see the impossibility of your occupying any portion of it."

"My friend," said he of the moustache, "you are a much cooler man than you look to be (this allusion to Brown's face was pacifying), but permit me to assure you that, without the least desire to be disagreeable to ladies, I intend to keep this seat for two good and sufficient reasons, the first of which is, I don't believe you have paid for two seats, and secondly, I don't believe you can occupy both of them at the same time; therefore I beg you will not trouble me further in the matter." Moustache turned his back toward the irate Brown, who, exasperated by his misfortunes, looked first at the window, then at his enemy, as though calculating the chances of pitching him out of the window, a thing he seriously contemplated; but as the ladies began to show alarm, and begged him to say nothing more about it, he satisfied himself by informing the interloper that nothing but the presence of ladies prevented him from carrying out his charitable intention in regard to the window. With a peculiar smile and a shrug of the shoulders, the endangered party remarked that "he should always feel that he owed his safety to the presence of the ladies." At this juncture a rather timid individual in the seat immediately behind the girls offered Brown his seat, so, stifling his wrath, B. proceeded to arrange the two seats according to his taste. He was not satisfied, though, and, inwardly vowing vengeance against he of the moustache, he concluded to enjoy himself as well as his ruffled feelings would admit. After a short time it was necessary to change cars, and a delay of half an hour was in order. Moustache got up and walked out to stretch his legs, and Brown started out to appease his wrath by punching the other's head a little. Walking up toward the spot where his foe was chatting with a rather small sized man, with a beard on his chin, Brown began with the preliminaries:—

"I believe you are the insolent fellow that took my seat?"

"Yes, sir," said moustache, with a queer expression in his eye and a curious smile, "I am that insolent fellow."

"I am going to give you a lesson in manners, sir," said Brown, in his coolest and most impressive tone. "I propose to teach you gentility in one lesson," he continued, in the same measured manner, and at the same time slowly drawing off one of his tight-fitting kids.

The man grew broader on the other's face as he innocently inquired, "In what manner do you propose imparting your instruction?"

"I propose softening your rather hard looking head a little, and afterwards to whisper it in your ear," said Brown, tugging at his other glove.

The smile on the face of moustache grew audible, as did that of the little man, as he inquired "Are you about ready to begin your lesson?"

Now, Brown did not like the look of things; that little laugh and the perfectly indifferent air of his man did not exactly satisfy him; he was not altogether afraid, yet he felt that the other was not scared a bit, but, feeling himself to be the bigger man, he thought he was all right, so, making a tug at his coat sleeves, he contemplated landing a left hit on the well developed nose of his adversary. The little man continued to smile, and moustache seemed to take the affair as a huge joke, whilst the little group of bystanders looked forward to the pleasure of a nice little fight.

But at this juncture a gentleman stepped up, and, taking Brown by the arm, said, "What the devil are you at? Do you know that that is Jem Mace, the smartest man in the world?"

To say that Brown was frightened would, perhaps, be doing injustice to a brave man, but he was certainly dreadfully discouraged, so, taking off his stovepipe hat, he said, "So you are Mr. Mace, of England?"

"I am so called."

"Gentlemen, Mr. Mace, everybody, don't you think you had better go and take a drink at my expense?"

And with a roar of laughter the crowd followed the discomfited Brown to the nearest saloon, whilst an old brakeman murmured, "If that there chap hadn't told him it was Mace, he'd a gone home with the beautifullest nose you ever seed."

WILLIAM COURTENAY, Fort Benton, M. T.—"Bruce's Address to his army at Bannockburn." The authority to which you appealed says that "the original reading of the fourth line in Burns' ode was 'chains and slavery'—a line of five feet, and the only one suitable to the air of 'Hey, tuttie tattie,' for which the author distinctly intended it, and chiefly because he believed that it had been the Scottish hero's 'March' at Bannockburn. George Thomson, as is well known, recommended the air of 'Lewis Gordon,' which is a very spiritless one, and, therefore, altogether unfitted to exalt a soul-stirring ode. Burns knew well and lengthened the fourth line of each verse to seven feet, that in the second verse being 'Edward! Chains and Slavery!' A very few years, however, reversed the judgment of the poet and his friend, and the address is now immortally wedded to the air of 'Hey, tuttie tattie,' to the music of which it is sung in every quarter of the globe. Of course, if we sing it to 'Lewis Gordon,' we must use the silly expletives recommended by Thomson and partially adopted by Burns; but if we abide by 'Hey, tuttie tattie,' for which the glorious strain was written, we must discard Thomson's imbecilities and fall back upon the author's own original and immortal words."

BARNEY St. Louis, Mo.—Tom King beat Truckle, Young Broome, Jem Mace and Heenan, and was beaten by Mace. 2. Joe Goss beat Jack Rooke, Tom Price, Bodger Crutchley, Bill Ryall, Posh Price and Ike Baker; was beaten by Jem Mace (twice), and fought a draw with Mace, Mace and Tom Allen. 3. Ned Donnelly beat Fills, T. Lowe, D. Campbell, Gutteridge, Sparkes and Tom Sayers; was beaten by Orme, and fought a draw with Ben Caunt. 4. Bill Richmond beat Green, Young, Jack Holmes, Carter Young, Jack Isaac Wood, Maddox, Powers, Davis and Shelton, and was defeated by Maddox and Cribb. 5. Jem Belcher beat Britton, T. Jones, Jack Bartholomew, Gamble, Bourke (three times and in a turn-up), and Price; was beaten by Pearce and Cribb (twice), and fought a draw with Bartholomew.

INQUIRER, Philadelphia.—"What is the effect of the amended rule governing pitching? Does it not give a great advantage to batsmen?"...The effect of the rule in question will be to afford the pitcher greater facilities for outwitting the batsman, and of necessity to oblige the latter to depend more upon his skill for success in batting, rather than upon mere muscle and heavy hitting. Hitherto the pitcher has been more or less cramped and confined in his position, while the batsman has been allowed full latitude to indulge in heavy hitting alone. Now he will be forced to avail himself of scientific play if the ball in order to earn bases. As long as the pitcher was obliged to send in balls just where the striker wanted them, all the batsman was called upon to do was to hit hard at every ball pitched for him to hit; hence the large scores from really poor, but heavy batting. Now the rules give the pitcher an equal chance with the batsman, and the result will be infinitely better play in match games, from the fact that it will be skill vs. skill, and not mere muscle against fielding.

DON, Wheeling, W. Va.—1. Yes, the Astor is a free library. 2. Go to some one of our most prominent advertising agencies. 3. Appleton's Guide will suit you. 4. With business colleges we have too little to do to give an opinion. 5. The Worden Hotel in Fourteenth street, opposite the Tammany. 6. They are united by marriage. 7. The steerage fare to San Francisco is, by railroad, first class, $173. There is no second class. 8. A railroad ticket is good to its full extent until the route implied is concluded.

J. W. D., Dixon.—1. Heenan and Sayers fought 42 rounds, according to the CLIPPER's special report. The referee left the ring at the end of the 37th round. 2. The injury to Sayers' right arm happened in the 26th round. 3. Heenan was seconded by Jack Macdonald and Jim Casick, Sayers by Harry Brunton and Jemmy Welsh. 4. Mace and Travers fought 68 rounds, two rings, Mace winning. 5. Not at present.

JIM H., Strathroy.—1. If you have a friend in the United States, send your dollar bills to him to change into small currency; or else you must remit in small coin in a registered letter. 2. By post office order for a dollar and upwards, or by small currency for less. 3. We don't know him personally, so can't say. Believe not—no risk, perhaps. 4. Your writing is only moderately good, and there is much room for improvement.

ATLANTIC.—1. Swandell voluntarily offered himself as a member of the Atlantics, but finally rejoined the Mutuals, and he is named to play second base for them this season. 2. We presume Pearce will play in his old position. 3. We cannot say. 4. We are short of back numbers of the CLIPPER, but probably could supply you with some of the names.

MARCUS.—1. Patrick Brannagan, alias "Scotty of Brooklyn," beat Barney Aaron in 10 rounds, 15 minutes, at Point Abino, Canada, Oct. 18th, 1869, as per record. A waiting hazard is made by pocketing the object ball, and a losing hazard by pocketing the cue ball. 4. We may do so.

TONY CLARK, N. Y.—1. The discrepancy of opinion arises from the fact that the base ball department has changed hands, the gentleman in charge differing in opinion from his younger predecessor. We regard Allison as one of the best catchers in the country, and we prefer Ferguson to Craver in the position. 2. The Fly-Aways claim the title, but it is a disputed claim. 3. They are about the same in style, we believe.

D. L., Boston.—At some theatres they announce that seats will not be reserved after the first act, and if this announcement is printed on the coupons, the holders are not entitled to the seats unless they are there previous to the termination of the first act; but if the coupons have no such proviso printed on them the holders are entitled to the seats any time during the evening.

J. H., Philadelphia.—1. Miss Leclercq is not the wife of Mr. Pechter. 2. Messrs. Carncross and Dixey, understanding that Simmons and Slocum contemplated starting a troupe of their own, had a conversation with them on the subject, and hearing that this report was true, a "little unpleasantness" ensued, which resulted in the abdication of Messrs. Slocum and Simmons.

D. F., Rice's Landing, Penn.—A makes the remark, 'My woman and young ones are here.' B asks, 'Are you married?' A replies, 'I have boys in the army as big as you are.' The question is, from the conversation, is A supposed to be married or not?...If the man is of good character, his reply would indicate that he is a married man; if otherwise, any construction can be placed upon it.

CONSTANT READER.—1. You must enquire of the Park Commissioners. 2. Mostly college and school nines. 3. Don't know. 4. Yes, he has, and will play second base for them. Swandell is as good a third baseman as any left-handed player can be. 5. Smith and Waterman. 6. Yes, when in practice. 7. No, "comparisons are odious."

F. I. LANCY.—1. They are equal to the best, if not the best. 2. Yes. 3. Yes. 4. Walters is to be the regular pitcher of the Mutuals. 5. He is nearly so, and he is considered superior to Fisher because his more command of the ball. 6. Allison, Craver, Ferguson, C. Mills and Craver is their respective rank in order. 7. We can get one for you.

BYRON SHARDS, Williamsburgh.—The tank, etc., of the Manhattan water works still stands at the rear of No. 25 Centre and No. 2 Reade street, on the corner, and a figure of Neptune is still on the top of the building. By calling on Messrs. Slidell and Fargis, telegraph operators, you can see it at any time.

W. H. NORTHWOOD, Corinth, Miss.—In order to join the National Association you must either get together ten delegates from ten clubs of your state, or, if this cannot be done, you should write to Chas. E. Gorham, Secretary of the National Association, Treasury, Washington, asking to become a probationary member.

G. R., Baltimore.—1. It would depend entirely upon the author's conception of the character. 2. If you study the construction of Shakespeare's plays and those of other standard writers, you will find out all you want to know. 3. Leo Hudson played at Omaha, Neb., about two weeks ago.

A. H. C., Philadelphia.—1. If a trump is played in the game of euchre, you are not obliged to overtrump, but can put on any trump you think proper. 2. You are entitled to two points for the revoke and one for the trick taken by you—three points in all. 3. Nearly so.

FRANK D. BALTON, Baltimore.—"A, B, C are the names of three clubs. B plays A for the championship and wins; C plays B and beats B. Now, does the C club have to play the A club?"..... No, as the fact of the previous defeat of A by B implies the superiority of B, and C, in defeating B, obtains a double victory.

THE CLIPPER BOY.—1. JAS. F. Wambold has been in this city all winter; he played a short engagement at the Theatre Comique last fall; he was also down with Bailey's Circus and Menagerie the past season. 2. Tommy Ryan died at the residence of his sister, this city, last June, after a long and severe illness, of consumption.

SUBSCRIBER C., Philadelphia.—1. Two points may be scored for the euchre under any and all circumstances. 2. The whole hand, or player next to the dealer on his left, is the party who leads off when the trump has been determined.

E. B., Honesdale, Pa.—1. The player who takes the responsibility of the trump can go alone, and score four points if he takes all five tricks. An adversary cannot go alone against him. 2. At a single raffle three aces can be beaten by three deuces.

H. CUMMINGS, Lawton, O.—The tribunal appealed to having decided in favor of the democratic candidate, that settles the matter; and the party betting that the democrat would be elected wins the money.

CLIPPER BOY, Brooklyn.—1. They are about equal; Eggler, however, has been the most successful. 2. We give the nine in this week's CLIPPER. 3. Yes. 4. In June. 5. Do not know yet. 6. Yes. 7. We presume so.

LEADER, Scranton, Pa.—You should connect yourself with some dramatic association, whereby a knowledge of some of the duties and trials falling to the lot of actors would better prepare you for going upon the regular stage.

G. H. C.—1. Mr. E. L. Davenport was born in 1814. His first appearance on any stage was at the old Lion Theatre, Providence, R. I., as Parson Will to Booth's Sir Giles Overreach. 2. Mr. Fechter is to be at the French Theatre next week.

T. J. N., St. Louis.—1. Sophie was born in New Orleans in 1848. 2. Mr. Emmett's movements are recorded weekly in our dramatic department. 3. We have no time to spare to make purchases for correspondents; some of our advertisers may accommodate you.

C. HAIGGS, Clyde.—"Where can I get endless matches?"..... Endless matches are sometimes made at our office, but we don't believe they are the sort you require. We do not know where the article you need is to be had.

ANDIOUS.—J. H. Taylor went to England about a year ago, with a minstrel band, known under the title of Taylor and Sheppard's Minstrels; they were playing in Liverpool at last accounts. 2. Under the circumstances the party could not be punished for disgrace.

F. G. H.—At chequers A moves for B to jump, whereby A can in return take two men and one king from B. B claims he need not jump, but can move some other man and leave the first one for A to take up, while A claims differently. Which is right, A or B?.....A.

RENSHAW, Peoria, Ill.—The saying, "A Roland for an Oliver," originated during the time of the rival war in England. King Charles was popularly designated "Old Rolly"—hence the king, "a Roland for an Oliver"—Cromwell.

JOHN B. KEYSTONE.—1. The Pastime Club, of Richmond, is ready, doubtless, to meet you. Address A. Babcock, Post Office, Richmond, care of Mr. Ellis. 2. The deposit is necessary to insure the insertion of a challenge.

J. H. CASTLEMAN, Jacksonville.—A Junior nine is a nine of a Senior club composed of players under 18 years of age. A Junior club nine is different—that being a nine of a club not enrolled in the National Association.

BROADWAY, Philadelphia.—Broadway varies in width in different places. Above Union square it is much narrower than lower down town.

S. M. D., Saginaw, Mich.—Mr. Clark will forward a copy of Fishing as soon as they arrive. They have been delayed much longer than he quoted.

C. R. T.—The Paris crew of St. John, N. B., defeated the Ward Brothers at Springfield, Mass., in 1868. They never rowed against each other at any other time.

Reader.—For a minstrel troupe, the tax is ten dollars for each state, and if you play farces or pantomimes you are liable to a tax of $100 for each state.

APOLLYON, Zanesville.—Procure an interview with managers and let them see what you can do; if you have talent you need not wait long.

W. H. M., Wilmington, Ohio.—Boston is called the Hub, St. Louis the Mound City, New York the Empire City, and Baltimore the Monumental City.

S. T., Leavenworth.—"At cribbage, A plays a four, B a four, A a six, B a deuce, A a five, and B a trey. Does that constitute a run for B?"..... Yes, it makes a sequence of five for B, viz., 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

W. R. F., St. Louis.—1. Was Horace Lindsay born in this country about two years. 2. John Mulligan is with the San Francisco Minstrels, this city.

I. P.—Capt. Travis, the noted pistol shot, is a man of slight build, weighing about 130 lbs., stands 5 feet 4 in height, and is in the neighborhood of 48 years old.

F. J. B., Danville.—A neat fitting calfskin shoe, Oxford tie, is about the best for jumping. If you had spring shoes they would be barred out.

R. R., Mobile, Ala.—1. Jem Mace beat Bob Brettle in 11 rounds, 10 minutes, in September, 1869. 2. In his matches with Mike Maddox.

W. P., Lexington, Ky.—Beadle's Dime Book of Chess, by Hazeltine, is about the best for a beginner. Address Beadle & Co., New York.

SPARKENBURGH.—If the bet was made that the money should go with the stakes, then the decision of the stakeholder will guide you; if not, then it is a draw.

W. M., Newark, N. J.—If the piece of leather was the same size on the 7, a full dime piece, if its being damaged on the face, so long as there was no piece taken clean out, would not alter the size.

READER.—1. Money received pays for ten weeks. 2. William F. Wood, Jr., is president, and R. F. McBurney, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association.

CAMPO.—If wins the fight. A had no right to touch his fowl for any purpose whatever when he was not fast, either in the carpet, his opponent or himself.

SUBSCRIBER, Baltimore made his first appearance in America on November 22, 1858, at the Broadway Theatre as Hamlet and in the summer of 1859 left for Europe.

THOMAS, Philadelphia.—Mrs. Frank Mordaunt was divorced from her then lord in your city about three weeks ago, but the particulars have not, as yet, been published.

E. J. S., Danesville.—We are under the impression that he has published such a work. Drop him a note, in care of this office.

CHESTER.—What is considered the East River is a part of Long Island Sound.

FRED. W. S. S., Savannah.—You had better advertise for what you want, or perhaps a dramatic agent may help you.

C. A., C[illegible] Samuel White to Mr. Kelly, President of the Junior Base Ball Association, care of this office.

J. G. B., Washington.—The dealer and beggar can make their own arrangements; the other players have nothing to say in the matter.

WM., Atlanta, Ga.—We cannot inform you what was the cost of the two steamers.

REPEATER, Cincinnati.—At pitch all fours there is no game out in case of a tie.

J. O. D., Boston.—Rudd Bobie drove Dexter when he made his fastest time in Massachusetts.

READER.—1. There is no fare bank in New York where such a practice is allowed. 2. Faro is the correct spelling of the word.

T. F. L. A., Nashville.—Kossuth landed at Castle Garden on his arrival in this city.

JOHN AND WM.—Salaries are regulated to a great extent by the abilities and popularity of the performers.

CONSTANT READER.—We publish no names of nines or officers of clubs unless sent and signed by the secretary of the club.

HERRON BOY, Cincinnati, O.—Send on a deposit with your challenge.

INQUIRER.—The pronunciation of "Frou Frou" is as if spelt Froo Froo.

FULTON MARKET.—Howlett and Saul were executed in the Tombs in 1855; Johnson was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

D. J., Detroit, Mich.—John C. Heenan was born at West Troy, N. Y.

H. S. AND P. M., Baltimore.—You cannot expect the challenged party to "put up" when you have neglected to do so yourselves.

N. REYER.—To show that you mean business a deposit should have accompanied your offer.

AGENT, Columbus, O.—You had better address a dramatic agent or some of our advertisers who furnish gas fittings, etc.

R. WILKINS, Boston.—George Boniface is engaged at the Grand Opera House, New York.

TELEGRAPH, Chicago.—Julia Dean Hayne died in this city on the 6th of March, 1868.

CENTRAL, Buffalo.—Kate Stanton, jig dancer, died in this city in September, 1865.

AN AMATEUR.—1. It was so rumored. 2. We have not published any sketch of Carlotta. 3. We have the number you require.

BASE BALL PERSONALS.—We have an important letter from Baltimore for Peter Shreve, of this city.

MR. THOMAS.—You may probably be able to get it of R. Burnton, 92 Fourth avenue.

"ORMEE."—1. We have not heard of the party of late. 2. We will send it to you without charge.

EUCHRE, Memphis, Tenn.—If a partner assists the dealer cannot go alone unless an agreement has been made to that effect.

R. AND B.—Such a book was published last season; you may procure it from the American News Company, Nassau street.

A CONSTANT READER, Clinton, Iowa.—We never heard of any one becoming that smart.

THOS. MAWSON.—Tom Sayers and Jem Mace were never opponents in a prize fight.

SPARKES, Erie, Pa.—Jack Gorman, of London, Eng., beat Golding in 1867. We never heard of any one of the name you mention.

C. M. DUNLAP.—There are one or two ladies who lay claim to his name.

BILLIARDS.—A catch bet; but we might ask how can either have won the game when each one is beaten?

D. STEVENS.—At cribbage, three sevens and two aces count twenty; 12 by fifteens, six for pair-royal, and two for pair.

S. SCHOOLCRAFT.—B is DA skunked, as his low counts him one point in that hand.

BAD EGGS, Memphis.—You had better advertise for what you want; we know of none for sale.

THESPIAN.—Let some of our managers see what you can do, and, if you are smart in that line, they will soon give you something to do.

DOBSTICKS, Louisville.—Emmerson is probably the better of the two.

G. W. R., Philadelphia, Pa.—Heenan fought Tom Sayers and Tom King, in England.

J. W. R., St. Louis, Mo.—Sayers and Mace never entered a ring as opponents.

S. W. N., Washington.—The score at the finish of the game stands A, 7; B, 2.

VINGT-UN, Philadelphia.—The dealer first looks at his hand; if he holds a natural it is a stand-off.

C. M. C.—1. Nat Langham is not dead. 2. No; you are thinking of Ben Caunt, perhaps.

BALTIMORE.—Matt Rusk did not fight Chas. Freeman, but he did fight and whip Freeland, near Philadelphia, in 1843.

A. S. M., Pittsburgh, Pa.—Address W. Babcock, 23 Ann street, or Baldwin & Fullgraf, 138 Fulton street, this city.

AQUARIUS.—The Holyhead and Kingstone steamers were built on the Clyde, in Scotland.

WECCACOS, Silver Lake, Kansas.—If C ordered the dealer up, the latter could not go alone.

WHITE CAP.—1. Start. 2. Wolters. 3. Pearce. 4. Pearce will be. 5. Swandell has been appointed, but Patterson is the right man.

J. E. H., Pittsburgh, Pa.—A theatrical advertisement of ten lines for three months, cash in advance, will cost $15.00.

NEWARK.—The adversary can shuffle the cards, but the dealer must have the last shuffle.

D. E. E., Grand Island.—A does not lose his Jack, as it was turned up before any misdeal occurred.

OLD CORNER, San Francisco, Cal.—Thanks for your attention, but it was another party of the same name who was inquired for.

M. A., Chicago.—"Love Among the Roses" was written by Mr. E. Catlin, of Boston, for Delehanty and Hengler.

H. G., Niles, Mich.—You must send on a deposit if you wish your challenge accepted.

FRANK, St. Louis.—We have.

H. WALTERS.—There is no deposit with your challenge.

BROWER, Memphis.—Address some of our amusement agents.

E. B., Nashville.—Received.

C. T. M., Providence, R. I.—Not to our knowledge.

J. J. F., Lowell.—There is no other.

HOWE JONES.—The advertisement costs $1.80.

A READER, Philadelphia.—Lord Palmerston was of Irish descent.

A. H. G.—The age passes to C, after B declines coming in.

S. BURNS, Bay City.—We do not deal in game fowl.

"NEDD A. M."—Items of news will be very acceptable.

MONTAUK.—Of the three, we prefer Lotta.

SPOTTER, Philadelphia.—The prisoner was the visitor's father.

PRISONER OF CHILLON.—Express package received all right.

WM. WOOD.—We have a letter for you.

CIRCUS.—Will give you an answer next week.

D. W., Cressona, Pa.—Between thirty and forty is about the figure.

FELIGAM, Binghamton.—Louisa Moore is at Wallack's Theatre.

FERRUG.—All right.

WE CAN'T have a great deal of admiration or respect for the governing powers of Connecticut, who will turn out their militia to capture a lot of persons who went down there to see an exhibition of the manly art of self-defence and yet make no effort to catch the thieves who stole a group of statuary from a grave in New Haven a few days ago. Perhaps the blue law authorities do not look upon it as an offence to rob graves.

THE HUNGRY DINERS at one of the fashionable hotels were surprised to see on the bill of fare the other day the item "Mice Pie." This was rather more than they could swallow; so they interviewed the proprietor, who informed them that "Mince Pie" was what was intended. The omission of the letter n nearly brought that mouse to the cat.

STRIKES.—The cigar makers continue on their strike and it is not a safe bet that the strike will end in smoke. The blacksmiths at Baldwin's Foundry, Philadelphia, are also on it, and as they struck while the iron was hot, according to an old saying, they ought to succeed.

IN INDIANA, in addition to manufacturing divorces, they make molasses from corn. This is turn about, for in view of the fact that a great deal of molasses is made into whisky, there is no denying that divers people obtain considerable corn from molasses.

A CHANCE FOR A WOOD ENGRAVER.—A good wood engraver who may be desirous of going into business for himself can secure an office in the CLIPPER Building, and more than double the amount of rent will be given in work for the CLIPPER. Apply at this office.

THE WOMAN'S RIGHTERS talk of nominating a woman for President. By all means let them do so; but is it possible that any one of the dear creatures will be willing to acknowledge herself over thirty-five years old, the constitutional age?

RUMOR says that Gen. Jordan has abandoned the insurgent cause in Cuba for cause; if the rebs are no longer on the right side of the General, they must soon be "on the other side of Jordan."

WE HAVE some unprincipled thieves in this city. The other day two of them threw a man down in broad daylight, and then went through him for his valuables.

IN SOME STATES strenuous efforts are being made to abolish the death penalty. Of course, murderers and other unprincipled persons are interested in these movements.

"OUR JIM" says you had better eat all the oysters you can get hold of this month, for when May sets in oysters will be too ripe to taste good.

THE REPORTORIAL CORPS, of the New York press hold their annual reception on Monday evening next, April 25th, at Apollo Hall, corner of Broadway and 28th street.

NEWSPAPERS are getting imposed upon by reporters who report lies, and therein lies the difficulty of getting at the truth.

COTTER VS. RUSSELL.—The statement made by Edward Russell in our last, tended to the effect that he did not wish to swing clubs for money, which is something he has never yet done, although having won the champion medal, but that he was willing to have a private trial, brought Mr. Cotter to our office on the 16th inst., and in response thereto he says that he will not engage in a private trial, but wishes to have a contest in public for the championship, and for from $500 to $1,000 a side, the trial to take place at some suitable hall in this city. If Mr. Russell does not see proper to accept this offer, Cotter says that he will make a match, for either of the above amounts, with Harry Hill or any one else who lays claim to superior excellence in manipulating the muscle-developers.

VELOCIPEDING.—The contest for the Junior Velocipede Championship, which took place on the Capitoline Velocipede Race Track on Good Friday, between Frank Shaw and Young Naylor, resulted in the success of Shaw, who won the two first heats of a contest of best out of three circuits of the track—a third of a mile each circuit. The prize was a handsome silver medal donated by Messrs. Weed and Decker. But few people were present, and the probability is, from the little interest manifested, that it will be the last as it was the first single race of the season.

100 MILE RIDE.—John Taylor undertook the task of riding one hundred miles in five consecutive hours, using twenty-five horses, and changing horses every mile, at the Driving Park, Omaha, Nebraska. He was to secure his own horses and take the gate money for his pay. Through some mismanagement the sufficient number of horses were not secured, and after riding 86 miles in 2 hours and 26 minutes, the owners of the horses in use refused to allow them to go any longer, and the race against time came to a stop, when Taylor had every prospect of winning.

MR. H. R. MADDEN writes us from Rochester to the effect that Mr. Coon makes no pretensions whatever to speed in type-setting, and that therefore he will not make a match with Mr. Arensburg upon conditions different from those proposed heretofore by him—consequently there's no prospect of a match in that quarter. Won't some of our lightning compositors give George a go, just to make things lively and put his abilities to a true test?

MONTREAL ATHLETIC CLUB.—A second meeting of this new club was held on the 9th inst., at which the following officers were chosen:—President, R. H. Stephens; Vice-Presidents, S. H. Wallis, C. D. Rose and C. P. Davidson. Committee—A. Grant, J. P. Janes, D. Cushing, S. C. Stevenson, W. S. Maltby, R. H. Brand, H. Jones and J. D. Armstrong.

BOWLS.—A game of bowls for the Champion Cup was contested at the Montreal (C. E.) Gymnasium, on the 11th inst., between Messrs. McDonald and Bolton. The former won, scoring 1,691 to his opponent's 1,891, each player rolling ten strings. G. H. C. Smith was referee.

Squibs and Things.

— Three hundred thousand women work in Paris for 30 cents per day. No wonder then that the demi-monde are so numerous and that 36,000 of the females, from the Empress down, can appear in butterfly gaudiness so cheaply.

— Human nature is a strange paradox. His Holiness, the Pope, is reported to be purchasing Remington rifles in large quantities, which would seem to argue that he has "faith" in saltpeter as well as in St. Peter.

— A good house wife in Chelsea, Mass., who wished to get rid of a cupboard of bugs, thoroughly covered the shelves with kerosene oil, and applied a match. It killed the bugs and the fire department put out the fire.

— John Brennan, of Philadelphia, was convicted of highway robbery on the 14th inst., before Judge Gunning, and sentenced to fifteen years and six months' imprisonment at Sing Sing.

— The latest bit of Washington gossip is, "Senator — has taken a 'sober second' thought." Perhaps some of his constituents may remember when he took the first—but it's an "open question."

— For $400 a man in New Orleans offers to fight an alligator under the water with only a knife. The Jonahite will get chawed up, instead of swallowed, if he isn't careful.

— "Insanity in its Legal Relation to Crime" was the subject of a lecture by Dr. A. J. Chadsey before the Medico-Legal Society on the 14th inst. Quite applicable to the McFarland case.

— Mrs. Wing, of Cleveland, poured kerosene oil from a can upon the fire to increase the flames. The flames were increased. Mrs. Wing has taken wing to that undiscovered country, &c.

— A cashmere shawl, which occupied the whole time of three hundred weavers for three years to manufacture it, has been sent by the Maharajah of Cashmere as a present to Queen Victoria.

— For murdering Prince Henry in a duel in Spain, the Duke of Montpensier was sentenced on the 12th inst., to one month's banishment from Madrid and fined $6,000. Life's cheap in Spain.

— A bill to prohibit Mormonism in connection with a plurality of wives, or harenism, is about to be introduced to the House by Senator Nye. As a good proposition it cannot be de-Nyed.

— Smith, of Mooresville, Ind., boasts that he makes all his own clothes, and has had but one shirt in nine years. What does he do when that one shirt is being washed? Thereby hangs a tail.

— A Mr. Colt, who resided in Seventy-fifth street, this city, has been missing since the 1st of December, was found dead in an out-house, on the premises, a few days ago.

— Garibaldi denies, in the Italian papers, the story of his receiving a legacy of $60,000 from a Swiss lady. No doubt he wishes it was true.

— The Golden Gate, a new gambling house, has just been opened at Helena, by Miss Eleanor Dumont. Will the fair-one deal fair-oh! at faro?

— The first bar of tin ever made in the U. S., 8 inches long by 4 inches wide and 2 inches thick, was recently presented to the association of California pioneers.

— Lucien Cameron, conductor on the St. Paul R. R., has traveled 41,700 miles per year since 1861; or 375,300 in all which is equal to 15½ trips around the world.

— "The Sheltering Arms" is to be benefitted this week by two days' exhibition of August Belmont's gallery of paintings.

— Prof. Agassiz, who was born in Switzerland in 1807, and who has become so prominent in America as a naturalist and geologist, is reported as very ill.

— "All the ladies in the universe" were lately toasted at a lunatic ball in Austria. Is the "toasting" of ladies in Austria confined to lunatics?

— An editor in Staffordshire, Eng., was fined $100 not long ago for saying a gentleman killed a dog in a "wantonly cruel and inhuman manner."

— At the St. Louis Fifteenth Amendment celebration, the people were addressed by a White black man and a Brown white man.

— The handsomest and most accomplished lady in Oroville, Cal., is a compositor, and "sticks type" daily to procure the means for subsistence and adornment.

— Japanese rabbits are served up at nearly all the San Francisco dining saloons. In New York they would be called baked hares.

— "Who's got the measels?" was the remark howled at the Prince of Wales from the gallery of the Globe Theatre, London, the other night.

— "Keep it my good fellow," was what the Prince of Wales said to a railway porter who told him he had left his watch on the seat of the carriage.

— At Henry Schwartz's concert saloon, in William street, Peter Peterson was stabbed by a sailor, who escaped, at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 14th inst.

— A petition representing $400,000,000 worth of Broadway property has been presented in the Senate remonstrating against the proposed Arcade railroad.

THE ANGLO-CANADIAN MATCH.

The Newcastle (Eng.) Daily Chronicle of March 28th contains the following relative to the proposed match between the Paris crew, of St. John, N. B., and the Tyne champion four:—"It is the intention of Renforth, Martin, Winship and Taylor to go at once into training for the match. All the four are well at the present time, but Taylor is already in active work for his race with Addy, and until he has this affair off his hands he will find a man to take his place in the boat. The Tynesiders intend to row without a coxswain, and, to admit of their having a fair chance in this novel style of pulling, Mr. R. Jewitt, of Dunstan, will build them a new craft, which will be steered by James Taylor from his place in the bow. Taylor has had considerable practice in the steering of fine craft with his feet, and, indeed, was one of the very first to practice it in this country. We are confident that the gentlemen who have hitherto supported the Tyne Champion Crew will again come forward to supply them with the needful 'sinews of war' on the present occasion. The gallant champion and his trusty aides are ready and willing to cross the Atlantic in order to demonstrate the superiority of English oarsmanship and stamina in the New World, and there ought to be no difficulty in finding the necessary stake. It will also be necessary, should the match go on, to advance a sufficient sum to launch the four on such a long and expensive journey, and no time should be lost in taking the necessary steps to raise the sum required."

Bell's Life also has the subjoined communication, which will enlighten some of our readers:—

SIR.—In your impression of the 22d February you state that the intended race to come off near this city next July, between the Tyne and St. John's, N. B., crews, has been brought about through the medium of Spirit of Sport, the latter having been the bearer of a challenge sent out by the Tyne crew some time ago. This, however, is not the case, as apart from the fact of such challenge never having been received by the St. John's crew, coming through such a channel they (the St. John's crew) would pay no attention to it. The challenge which has recently been accepted by the Tyne crew is an original challenge from the Paris crew sent at the special request of this club, as appears by the wording of the document. Allow me further to correct you by stating that the amount of expenses to be allowed to the Tyne crew for rowing the race over our waters at Lachine (£300 sterling) will be provided entirely out of the funds of this club. Yours, &c., S. H. WALLIS, Honorary Secretary.

Lachine Boating Club, Montreal, Canada, March 8, 1870.

THE NEWARK, N. J., CLUBS.—Alderman Elliott, the Greenpoint boat builder, has at present on the stocks a six-oared shell, ordered by the Passaic Club, of Newark, N. J., which promises to be a very speedy craft. The Passaics intend to remain at Bowers', East Newark, where they are well accommodated, having a large room on the first floor for their boats, of which there are several, embracing all kinds, and a dressing room, &c., above. About the 1st of June they propose to have a club regatta. At the annual meeting held on the 5th inst., the following officers were elected:—President, E. B. Vanderveer; Secretary, E. M. Douglas; Captain, H. W. Nason; Trustees, E. A. Condit and T. W. Kennedy. The Naiad Club numbers some fifteen members. Their handsome boat house on the east bank of the river, nearly opposite the new gas works, costing $1,000, has been paid for, and may justly excite their pride. They are having a new boat constructed. If good stock and constant practice are of any value, the Naiads are certain to add to their laurels. A club has been formed in Belleville, composed of expert young men, and considerable rivalry between them and the Newark clubs is anticipated. Another club, composed of juveniles, has also been lately organized at the latter place.

POTOMAC CLUB, OF GEORGETOWN, D. C.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of this club was held on the 8th inst, at the residence of Col. Frank Jones, for the purpose of making arrangements for an active campaign this year. A large amount of business was transacted, including the appointment of a committee to procure new boats, and enlarge the boat-house. The following gentlemen were elected active members:—S. L. Studley, F. F. Bernard and S. T. Wheatley, while J. L. Chambers, of New York, was chosen an honorary member. The club is represented by some of the best physical strength and a majority of the best oarsmen in the district, and will do all it, their power to make good their claim to the position of the best club in that section. Boating there promises to be the lively style of season, and the Potomac would be pleased to receive proposals from clubs belonging to other cities.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.—We have not heard anything since our last issue from John McKeel relative to the acceptance of his previous proposition to Coulter, though sufficient time has, we think, elapsed to admit of his replying and covering Coulter's two hundred dollars, which remain on deposit at this office. It may be, however, that he has either not yet seen the cards, or that he has been unavoidably prevented responding thereto earlier. At all events we shall forbear commenting on the matter until we see what the current week may develop.

THE TOLEDO, OHIO, BOAT CLUB recently held a meeting for the election of officers, with the following result: President, C. R. Messenger; Vice-President, John Copeland, Jr.; Secretary, George Pepper; First Coxswain, David Bronson; Second Coxswain, James Douty. It was agreed by the members to go into training immediately for the regatta to come off in Detroit this season.

THE ATALANTA BOAT CLUB, of which Mr. David Banks, Jr., is a prominent member, also Commodore of the Hudson Rowing Association, presented him with a handsomely engrossed and framed set of resolutions on the evening of the 13th inst.

HARVARD VS. YALE.—It is probable that the approaching race between Harvard and Yale will take place upon the Seekonk river, at Providence, a delegation from Yale having made an inspection of the stream last week, with reference to its adaptability to the purpose.

A TELEGRAPHIC despatch informs us that Walter Brown has received the appointment of Instructor in Rowing to the Midshipmen at Anapolis. He has forfeited the championship.

THE TIDAL WAVE, owned by Commodore Voorhies, was successfully launched at Nyack, N. J., on the 12th inst.

RETURN MAIN BETWEEN LONG ISLAND AND WESTCHESTER.

THE FORMER VICTORIOUS.

The return main between the fanciers of Westchester county and Long Island came off on Thursday, the 14th inst., at a well known pit in the suburbs of Brooklyn. On the former occasion Westchester was victorious, but the tables were turned on the return contest, Long Island winning by a score of eight fights against seven. Messrs. Montgomery and McConnell represented the county, and Messrs. Hayden and Weir Long Island. The conditions were for each side to show fifteen cocks, and fight all that fell in for $40 each battle, and $200 the main, the weights to range from 4 lbs. 2 oz. to 5 lbs. 7 oz. On weighing, it was found that eleven on each side had fallen in, thus giving promise of capital sport.

First Battle.—Westchester sent in a 4 lb. black red, and Long Island a grand looking pyle of the same weight. The good looks of the latter made him the favorite, and $20 to $17 was currently offered. It was a brief affair, for in the second fly the favorite laid out his Westchester rival dead in the pit. Time, 2 minutes.

Second Battle.—Westchester sent in a dark red with yellow hackle and Long Island a brass back, each weighing 4 lbs. 3 oz. The brass back had the call in betting at $20 to $16, taken freely; but for the second time were the layers of odds successful in pulling through, after a good fight. Time, 3 minutes.

Third Battle.—Long Island produced a light red, weighing 4 lbs. 3 oz., and Westchester a dark red with yellow hackle, an ounce heavier. Betting $20 to $16 on Long Island, but after 13 minutes' sharp fighting the dark red sent his gaffs through the head of the favorite, and secured for Westchester their first fight.

Fourth Battle.—Long Island pitted a 4 lb 4 oz pyle against Westchester's black red, one ounce heavier. The odds were $12 to $10 on Long Island, but after 7 minutes' sharp fighting the favorite was laid out by a brain blow. Two fights each, and the betting on the main now changed, the odds of $30 to $26 on Westchester.

Fifth Battle.—Long Island pitted a spangle, 4 lbs. 6 oz., and Westchester a pyle, 4 lbs. 7 oz. The spangle was a rare fighter, and quickly laid out his Westchester foe. Time, 4 minutes.

Sixth Battle.—Westchester produced a dark red and Long Island a grey, each 4lbs. 8oz. This was a game fight and ended in the Westchester bird being killed by a brain blow. Time, 11 minutes.

Seventh Battle.—Westchester pitted a muff and Long Island a brass back, each 4lbs. 8oz. The muff was the favorite at $30 to $16, and, though he received a throat cut, fought gamely on and almost killed his antagonist. Time, 19 minutes.

Eighth Battle.—Two 4lb. 9oz. birds, a light red for Long Island and a ginger for Westchester. The betting was 2 to 1 on the main was 2 to 1 on Long Island, who had won four out of seven fights. Neither bird was of any account, but the Westchester fellow ran at the first fly and was counted out. Time, 2 minutes.

Ninth Battle.—The Islanders sent in a birch back and Westchester a dark red, two 4lb. 13oz. birds. It proved a game and protracted fight, lasting 18 minutes, but Westchester won.

Tenth Battle.—Westchester pitted a blue pyle weighing 4lbs. 14oz., and Long Island a black red, 4lbs. 15oz. The light-weight had it all his own way and won in 6 minutes.

Eleventh Battle.—Each side had now won five fights, and the interest on the issue was very great. The betting was $100 to $76 on Long Island, who sent in a pyle weighing 5lbs. 3oz., against Westchester's dark red, weighing 5lbs. 2oz. It was a game battle, but Long Island triumphed. Time, 7 minutes.

Twelfth Battle.—Long Island pitted a birch back weighing 5lbs. 6oz., and Westchester a black red, same weight. The birch back was the favorite at $20 to $16, and he proved a ripper, killing his antagonist in 4 minutes, and winning the main for Long Island.

Thirteenth Battle.—Westchester pitted a black red, and Long Island a birch, each weighing 5lbs. 8oz. The odds were $10 to $8 on the birch, and he won after a rattling fight of 8 minutes. Summary:—

| Bat. | Long Island. | Weight. | Westchester. | Weight. | Won by |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | Pyle | Black Red | 4lbs. 3oz. | 4lbs. 3oz. | Long Island. |
| 2 | Brass Back | Black Red | 4lbs. 3oz. | 4lbs. 3oz. | Long Island. |

| 13 | Birch | Dark Red | 5lbs. 8oz. | 5lbs. 8oz. | Long Island. |

PEDESTRIANISM.

ONE HUNDRED YARDS MATCH.—Articles of agreement have been entered into between William Goodey, of Paterson, and Thomas Parker, of Hudson City, N. J., according to the stipulations of which they agree to run one hundred yards, two yards scratch start, for $200 a side, one-fourth of which sum is now posted in our hands; the second deposit, of $50 a side, is to be put up at Wm. Granger's Union House, Paterson, on April 23d, between 8 and 10 o'clock, P. M., and the match, of $100 a side, at this office on April 30th, before 5 o'clock, P. M. The articles sent to us omit to state the locality chosen for the contest, but we presume it will be Paterson, but it is to take place on Monday, May 2d, the ground to be properly roped and staked. Either party leaving his mark before the report of pistol, unless the race be settled by a scratch start, shall, for the first offence, be put back one yard, the second time two yards, and the third time to forfeit the money. Only one person is to be allowed on the mark with either party, and either man failing to be on the grounds at 10 o'clock, A. M., on May 2d, shall forfeit the money. It is also stipulated that we act as final stakeholder and appoint a referee, but we respectfully decline the honor, although we have no objection to holding the money temporarily.

SEARLES AND HILL MATCHED.—Last week we mentioned the reception of articles of agreement for a jumping match between A. V. Hill, of Hinsdale, N. Y., and Ned Searles, of Sing Sing, signed by the former and accompanied by $50 as a forfeit; also that Searles had covered that sum but declined to sign until a clause barring spring shoes was inserted in the protocol. We at once wrote to Mr. A. S. Dayton, who backs Hill, stating these facts, and on the 12th inst. we received a reply, in which he announced his willingness to agree to the insertion of such clause. We notified Searles of this, and on the 15th he called upon us and attached his autograph to the articles, the terms of which are as follows:—To jump one single jump, spirit level, spring shoes barred out, each man to be allowed twelve trials, and the one having the best jump at the expiration of the twelve trials to take the money, $200 a side, the balance of which, $300 a side, must be staked on the 11th day of June, at Binghamton, the time and place fixed for the decision of the match. Searles is well known as an excellent jumper, while Hill, though not of great repute, is well thought of near home, and his friends are confident he will hold his own.

JOHN ODDY AND R. P. CLARK tried their pedestrian powers in a match on the race track, Elkton, Md., on the 7th inst.' the former to walk two miles while the latter ran the same miles and a half. Oddy won by two hundred yards, covering the two miles in a few seconds less than fifteen minutes.

JOHN FORBES, of Woodstock, C. W., writes thus sensibly concerning the challenges recently offered by the backer of the "Cleveland Boy:"—

EDITOR NEW YORK CLIPPER.—DEAR SIR.—I have seen a challenge or two from Mr. Walker, of Paterson, N. J., to run his "boy Herzog." If he means business let him put up something to show that he does, and probably he may get a race, although I have seen no offer on even terms as yet. JOHN FORBES.

JIM ADAMS had a tolerably good benefit at Harry Hill's on Monday afternoon, 11th inst., when, in addition to an olio performance, there were boxing matches between well known knights of the gloves.

OLD BILL KENDRICKS AND HENRY LEE ran 440 yards, for $200 a side, at Akron, O., on the 9th inst., the former winning with ridiculous ease in 54 seconds.

AMERICAN TURF.

The Metairie, New Orleans, Spring Meeting.

SECOND DAY, TUESDAY, APRIL 5TH.

The beautiful weather which favored the opening day of the Metairie Jockey Club Spring Meeting, on Saturday, was continued on Tuesday, the second day. The attendance was very numerous, the proportion of ladies, dressed in the height of fashion, being especially large and noticeable.

The Hurdle Race was the first event, and had three entries—Lobelia, 6 yrs., 128lbs.; Wild Cat, aged, 128lbs.; and Mitchell, 3 yrs., 112lbs. The distance was two miles, over eight hurdles; $25 each, play or pay, with $600 added by the club, of which $100 went to the second horse. Lobelia and Mitchell are well known in the north, where they have oft met each other with varying success. Wild Cat was looked upon as belonging to the hopeless division. The betting was $100 to $40 on the old mare, although Mitchell's friends strongly fancied his chance when he was brought out in tip-top condition. The Batter led for over a mile and a half, when Lobelia closed, took the lead on the last quarter, and won a capital race by a neck only. Time 3:54½.

The second race was mile heats, for all ages, for the Club Purse of $50, with $100 to the second horse. The entries, seven in number, were Combination, 3 yrs.; Lancer, 4 yrs.; Lizzie McDonald, 3 yrs.; Allie Hunt, 3 yrs.; Harpoon, 3 yrs.; Larkin, aged, and Alice Poole, 3 yrs., but she was withdrawn on account of lameness. Allie Hunt was the favorite against the entire field, but Combination had some staunch backers—the race, in the opinion of every one, laying between the pair. Allie Hunt won the first heat in 1:46¾, with Lizzie McDonald second and Lancer third. Larkin, once so formidable when in Capt. T. G. Moore's hands, now comes to grief in consequence of lameness. The second heat was won by Combination in 1:45½; Allie Hunt and Harpoon coming into a collision together at the half mile pole, which caused both being distanced. It was now any odds on Combination, who won the third heat and race cleverly in 1:49¾.

THIRD DAY, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6TH.

Glorious weather and a brilliant assemblage of fashion and beauty signalised the third day of the meeting. The three mile race for all ages opened the ball; the winner taking the club purse of $600, of which the second horse was entitled to $100. The entries and starters, seven in number, were:—Carrie Atherton, 4 yrs; Col. Roberts, 3 yrs; Emma Maratta, 4 yrs; Privateer, 6 yrs; Matt Griffin, 4 yrs; Buck Reese, 3 yrs, and Chalmette, 4 yrs. Buck Reece was the favorite; the betting between him and Privateer being heavy; still every horse had his backers. The race was won cleverly by Carrie Atherton by two lengths; Col. Roberts and Emma Maratta second and third, Privateer fourth, Natt Griffin and Buck Reece fifth and sixth, and Chalmette last. Time, 5:36¼; the last two miles being run in 3:38¾, which surpasses both Lexington and Lecomte's time over this course.

The Sweepstakes for three year olds, two mile heats, $25 each, p p, with $700 added, of which the second horse received $200, was the next race. Five out of the seven entered paid forfeit, leaving the race to Coquette, by Lexington, dam Susan Harris, and ch f by Uncle Vic; the former winning easily. Time, 3:41¾; 3:38.

FOURTH DAY—THURSDAY, APRIL 7.

Fine weather, a fine track, a large attendance and capital racing distinguished the fourth day's sport. The first event was a selling race, dash of one mile and a half, for which all the five horses entered came to the post—Combination, 3 years; Derringer, 3 years; Minnie, 3 years; Bettie Bay, 4 years; and Jim Underwood, 4 years. Combination was the favorite against the field, but his backers were brought to grief for Derringer, after a splendid race with the favorite, won cleverly in 2:42¾, the last mile having been run in 1:48½. The winner belongs to Mr. A. Bienvenue, and is by Rogers, dam by Engineer.

The second race was two mile heats, for a purse of $700 given by the Jockey Club, of which the second horse received $200. The starters were Coquette, 3 years; Matt Griffin, 4 years; Buck Reece, 3 years; Donovan, 4 years; Lancer, 4 years; and Alice Poole, 3 years. Any odds would have been laid on Coquette winning, which she did easily in 3:43¾; 3:40¾. Lancer and Alice Poole were distanced in the first heat and Donovan in the second.

FIFTH DAY, SATURDAY, APRIL 9.

A tremendous storm of rain and wind rendered a postponement of the fifth day's racing until the following day absolutely necessary. The weather cleared off beautifully, but left the track very heavy. The first event was the hurdle race, for which Lobelia, Mitchell, Wild Cat and Chalmette were entered, Lobelia carrying 11lbs. extra for winning the first hurdle race.—The pools sold as follows:—Lobelia and Mitchell, $200 each; Chalmette and Wild Cat, $15 together. So completely were the chances of the two latter horses ignored that in hat pools the parties who drew them tore up their tickets, considering they had no possible show of winning. Mitchell led over the two first hurdles, with Wild Cat, Lobelia and Chalmette following in the order named. At the third hurdle Chalmette took second place, and was at side by side with Mitchell as they passed the stand on the first mile. Time, 2:07. Chalmette now took a decided lead, and, notwithstanding the most vigorous efforts of Mitchell and Lobelia to overhaul him, won cleverly by six lengths amid the most enthusiastic cheering, his success over the two celebrated hurdlers being looked upon as a local triumph. Mitchell was second and Lobelia third. Time, 4:12.

The second race was the National Eagle Stake for untried two year olds, mile heats, five half eagles entrance, p. p., with 60 eagles added by the club, and 15 eagles to the second horse. The starters were T. G. Moore's ch c Foster by Lexington dam Verona (consequently full brother to Vauxhall); H. B. Foley's b f Imp. Mickey Free dam Betsey Ives; James Lupes' b c Restless by Voucher dam Ringlet; and Paul and Jackson's b c Chickoree, by Melbourne, dam by Star Davis. The night before in pools Foster sold for $150; Restless, $100; Chickoree, $100, and the Mickey Free filly, $75. On the course, however, there was a great change, for Foster was the favorite at nearly 2 to 1 against the field. Restless had a good many admirers. Chickoree was declared to be the fastest colt in the country, Captain Moore feeling very confidence in his colt, and told his friends that if Foster was beaten the winner would be the best track horse on the turf. Mr. John Coffee, of this city, who owns a joint interest with the captain in Foster, backed him to win a large stake, and it came off trumps, for Foster won the race in two heats, in the easiest possible manner. The Mickey Free filly was second in both heats, and Chickoree distanced in the first. Time, 1:55½; 1:56½.

SIXTH DAY, MONDAY, APRIL 11TH.

The meeting closed to-day with beautiful weather, good racing, capital track and large attendance. The first race was for beaten horses for a purse of $500; the second horse taking $100 of it, as some consolation for his defeat. Five horses started. Emma Maratta, 5 yrs.; John McDonald, 3 yrs.; Lancer, 4 yrs.; Morgan Scout, 4 yrs., and Alice Poole, 3 yrs. Emma Maratta had the call in the betting, and she justified the faith her friends reposed in her, by winning cleverly in two heats: time, 1:50½; 1:48.

The second race was for the National Double Eagle Stakes, for all ages; four mile heats; two double eagles entrance, play or pay, with fifty double eagles added by the Jockey Club. The second horse to receive ten double eagles, and the third horse his entrance money. There were eight entries and four starters—Currie Atherton, 5 yrs., by Lexington, dam Glycera (Knighthood's dam); Colonel Roberts, 3 yrs., by Rogers, dam The Colonel; King Tom, 5 yrs., by Lexington, dam Tokay; and Lobelia, 6 yrs., by Bonnie Scotland, dam Capitola. Colonel Roberts won the heat in 7:36¾, and Currie Atherton the second and third heats, and race in 7:40¾; 7:56. The winner belongs to Messrs. Keene Richards and Kilgour, and is trained by George Rice. She had previously won the three-mile dash on the third day of the meeting.

DEATH OF BONNIE LASSIE.—We learn with regret that Colonel McDaniels has lost his promising four year old filly Bonnie Lassie, who died on the 9th inst., of the disease known as "big head." Bonnie Lassie was bred by Mr. James S. Watson of Valley Brook, N. J., and was by imported Balrownie, dam Pasta by Revenue, Colonel McDaniels buying her at Mr. Watson's annual sale, when a yearling, for $950, and the year after he refused $6,500 for her. As a two year old she was almost invincible, her first appearance on the turf being at the Secaucus May Meeting in 1868, when she won the half-mile race very easily in 51¼ seconds, beating a field of six horses. The following June, at the Jerome Park meeting, she won the Hopeful Stakes, beating easily seven opponents (among them Fenian, Cannie Bairn and Invercaigd), 5 furlongs, in 1:06¾. The following week she won the Two Year Old Sweepstakes, half a mile dash, carrying a 7lb. penalty, in a common canter, from a field of eight opponents. At the October meeting over the same course, she won the Nursery Stakes, one mile, from a field of seven opponents, winning by ten lengths in 1:47¾. She received forfeit in a match with Mr. Cameron's filly, Invercanid, at the same meeting. The following year she ran second to Alta Vela for the Two Year Old Stakes at Saratoga—nine starting. This was her last performance, for she contracted the disease which subsequently proved fatal. Her winnings amounted to over $8,000.

THE FLEETWOOD PARK AND NARRAGANSETT TROTTING MEETINGS.—The Narragansett Park Association have announced the programme for their summer trotting meeting, which commences June 21st and continues four days. The amount of public money to be trotted for is $25,000, and the association offers an extra premium of $2,500 to any horse beating the fastest time (2:17¼) on record. There is a purse of $2,000 for green horses, and one of $3,000 for 2:24 horses on the first day. On the second day there is a $4,000 purse for 2:27 horses and one of $3,000 for double teams. On the third day the purses are $2,000 and $3,000 respectively for 2:50 and 2:27 horses; and on the last day one purse of $2,500 for 2:22 horses and one of $5,000 free for all. All the above races are mile heats, in harness, and the new trotting rules of the National Congress govern. The inaugural Meeting of the Fleetwood Park is fixed for July 6th, 7th and 8th. The purses offered for public competition amount to $15,300, including one of $4,000 free for all horses; two of $2,000 each for 2:26 and 2:20 horses; one of $1,500 for 2:25 horses, two miles and repeat; one of $1,000 for 2:40 horses, and one of $700 for three minute horses. These purses are divided into premiums for the first, second and third horses, and the new rules of trotting will govern.

THE DERBY.—A cable telegram, dated London, April 16th, states that the latest betting at Tattersall's was as follows:—Derby, 20 to 1 against Bridgewater and Camel each; Guiness Stakes, 5 to 1 against Kingcraft.

THE ST. GEORGE CLUB.—This club have arranged to take their first fielding day for the season on Monday, May 2d, on their grounds at Hudson City, which they will occupy for one month each season. They will have a stronger eleven this year than last, and the prospect is that they will be quite busy with matches this year.

OPENING DAY IN PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Club will open play on their grounds at Camden on Thursday next at 11 A. M., at which time sides will be chosen for a one-innings game.

THE WILLOW CLUB.—The Willows have engaged Eastman, of Boston, as their professional for 1870, and they will open play on their fine field at Prospect Park on Saturday, April 30th, closing the day's proceedings with a dinner at Ward's.

FOSTER VS. DION.—Should Joseph Dion not accept Melvin Foster's challenge to play the three-ball game, for $500 a side, the latter will leave it open to the acceptance of any American players.

TOURNAMENT AT THE ASTOR.—There is now in progress, at the Billiard Rooms, corner of Broadway and Barclay street, a tournament of amateurs for a handsome emblematic cue.

CANADA ITEMS.—Jakes, of Coburg, has accepted a challenge from Mr. O'Connor, of Peterboro', to play 1,000 points for $100 and the championship cue of Ontario. It will be played in Toronto early in May.....The series of contests which have been in progress for some time past at Egener's saloon, Hamilton, were concluded on the 16th inst. Jas. Phelan won the cup and championship of Hamilton, and was presented with a silver tankard.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

London. Messrs. Green and Spencer did not hear of his death till the next morning, when they arrived at Wrotham on their way home. An experimental ascent was made on the 10th of September, 1838, for the purpose of ascertaining the greatest altitude that could be attained with the great Nassau balloon, inflated with carburetted hydrogen gas and carrying two persons only. Mr. Green ascended, with Mr. Rush for his companion, and they reached the elevation of 27,146 feet, or about five miles and a quarter, as indicated by the barometer, which fell from 30.50 in 13, the thermometer falling from 61 degs. to 5 degs., or 27 degs. below freezing point. The air near the earth on this occasion was so calm that they remained nearly over Vauxhall fully half an hour; but at the greatest elevation the current carried them with great velocity, and in one hour and fifteen minutes they effected a landing on the west side of Lewes, in Sussex, the air being as tranquil on the earth as when they ascended. On several occasions Mr. Green has been carried between eighty to one hundred miles in the hour. On March 31, 1851, he ascended from Hastings about one o'clock, in the Royal Victoria Balloon, accompanied by the Duke of Brunswick, and descended at six o'clock near Neufchatel, about ten miles southwest of Boulogne, the voyage having occupied nearly five hours. His last and farewell public ascent took place from the Royal Gardens, Vauxhall, London, September 13, 1852.

THE NIGHTMARE.

WRITTEN IN IMITATION OF POE, FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY J. A. LEONARD.

Once upon a midnight sultry,
As I dreampt of foul adultry,
Sleeping in my cheerless chamber,
Where I'd often slept before:
Suddenly, while tossing, kicking,
In mine ears there came a ticking,
In my flesh there came a pricking,
Pricking at each sep'rate pore.
'Twas the salad I'd been eating,
Eating just awhile before—
This it was and nothing more.

Ah! why should weak and sickly stomachs
Make of man a restless lummux?
Why should he indulge in that
Which makes him kick and snort and snore?
For snoring is to all disgusting;
The sexes both are each mistrusting
That their bosom favorite, lusting,
May be found to nightly snore.
This it is which makes them watchful
Of the heart they most adore—
Simply this and nothing more.

In the pure and sweet exotics
Maids have often placed narcotics;
On each petal they have placed it,
In the goodly days of yore,
And when their swains would fall to sleeping,
Then so gently they'd come peeping,
And so softly they'd come creeping,
You'd hear no footfalls on the floor.
And, if their bumpkin should awaken,
They'd swear they came to close the door—
Only this and nothing more.

In my lobster salad slumber,
Something did my limbs encumber;
Help! I cried, aloud, affrighted,
Trembling and distracted sore.
Then my tongue began to quiver,
And my gall forsook my liver,
And my frame began to shiver,
Shiver as if all were o'er.
And my heart, from all her flood-gates,
Did my gurgling blood outpour—
Only this and nothing more.

Then I saw a matchless wonder
Which tore the cares of life asunder;
A lady charmed me with her beauty
And the graceful mien she bore,
And about me she kept prancing,
And around me she kept dancing,
First retiring, then advancing,
Like a sylph upon the floor;
With her silken panniered flouncings
And the jaunty hat she wore—
Pranced and danced and nothing more.

While I watched her, wondering, thinking,
Soon I saw the beauty winking,
Winking like the ladies wink,
As I've seen them wink before.
Without a word or wish expressing,
Without a word of love confessing,
The charming nymph began undressing,
Winking all the while the more.
And when undressed, then speeding, hasting,
Straight she went and locked the door—
Merely this and nothing more.

Then methought she was a specire,
In spotless white she had bedecked her,
Advancing slowly to my bed, like
One I oft had seen before.
Aloft she raised a gleaming dagger,
And began to strut and swagger,
Swagger with her gleaming dagger,
And the fierce grimace she wore.
"Wretch!" she cried, "thou hast deceived me,
Soon I'll have thy heart's red gore"—
This she said and nothing more.

I the while in anguish lying,
Trembling, fearing, almost dying,
Began, with all my might and main,
To kick and holla, cry and roar.
Then upon me quickly springing,
To my thorax strongly clinging,
To her aid her poinard bringing,
Stabbed me deeply to the core.
For that I had truly loved her,
Baibed her hands in human gore—
Stabbed and killed, and nothing more.

And without a word of grumbling
Down to hell I went a-tumbling,
And through eternal chaos fell,
Crash against a brazen door.
Cerbe, with his treble headings,
Sleeping on his hairy sheddings,
For the lack of better beddings,
"On the Night's Plutonian shore,"
Started from his heavy slumber,
And opened wide the brazen door—
"Darkness there and nothing more."

Long into that darkness peeping,
Horror unto horror heaping,
I gazed upon sage Milton's hell,
And Dante's ancient lore.
Before me stood a stalwart nigger,
A dingy, grim, ungainly nigger,
A nasty, greasy, dirty nigger,
Grease and dirt his stock and store.
He grasped my trembling hand with fervor,
Cerberus barred the brazen door—
Hell was closed and nothing more.

As back from thence I turned retreating,
Hell waxed hot and still was heating;
Heating for some other souls that Came a little time before.
But to them I gave no heeding,
Nor could I hear to hear them pleading,
Pleading to the demons feeding
On their flesh and clotted gore.
Then I said to Cerbe, blandly,
"Be kind enough to ope the door"—
Quoth the monster, "Never more."

"Then," said I, "my surly master,
Bar it fast or bar it faster,
Time will come when you will gladly
Ope again this pondrous door.
Earth abounds with curious people,
Who for fame build many a steeple,
These are mostly praying people.
Some are frauds and some are more.
To the worst of these you'll surely Gladly open wide your door"—
Quoth the monster, "Never more."

Then cried Satan, loudly bawling,
Poor old Cerbe., quite appalling,
"What is that which thou hast said
To him of never, never more?"
Then said Cerbe., "lately earth had
Of righteous souls a mighty draft on hand,
And her wicked wars and mirth had
Filled all hell to boiling o'er.
And as we've no place to put them,
I merely told him that the door
Should be closed for evermore."

Satan said, "then by the mast, sir,
Friend, you are somewhat too fast, sir;
For to my boiling cauldron's bubble
Yet I'll welcome many more.
For, good sooth, I think 'twere pity
That so many a'rant and witty
Damsels fair of New York city,
With cuckold or with paramour,
Should lose reward that's justly due them,
Due them now and long before—
To burn in hell forever more.

"And you know there's jolly jokers,
And there's also scheming brokers,
And Bears that hug and bite and tear,
And Bulls that bellow, bawland roar.
And besides, there's nightly rambles,
And there's rakish Broadway amblers,
And there's fancy, dashing gamblers,
And of these there's many a score.
And with all these I'm delighted,
And to them will ope the door,
And give them welcome evermore.

"And, on safe and sound conditions,
I'll take a few more politicians;
Yet no; for since I now bethink me,
Of these chaps I'll have no more.
But there's many a wicked teacher,
Many a lying, prating preacher,
Who strive to make themselves a Reecher,
And bellow till their lungs are sore;
In hell's hot embers these I'll toast,
Their leaders I expect to roast,
Roast in hell for evermore.

And the council occumenic,
And the Rump, the croaking senate,
And a few more noisy sailors,
Wrecked upon some barren shore.
And some swabs with sword and buckler,
Who'd sell their ship for pelf or scuttle her,
Like some conniving little butler,
Or legal pettifogging bore.
In these domains there's place a plenty
For such canaille to howl and roar,
Burn and writhe forever more.

And within a few more winters
There'll be some room for some more printers,
And some knights of nom de guerre,
Who here can con their writings o'er.
They may come without intrusion,
Lest they should with each effusion
Make in hell too much confusion,
Conning o'er their treasured lore.
But should they here begin to wrangle
Hell will then the craft ignore—
Ignore the craft forever more.

"And there's room for more traducers,
But most of all I like seducers,
And to the gaping jaws of hell
I'll welcome yet vast millions more.
My fires I'll raise from wrath to rage,
No Lethe shall their pangs assuage,
But burn in hell while hell hath age,
In endless fires of molten ore.
Wailing, weeping, howling, shrieking,
Burning to their hearts' red core,
Forever and forever more."

Just then I heard a mighty clatter,
What in hell could be the matter
Satan's self was somewhat startled,
And bade his imps draw near the door.
Then, with words somewhat pacific,
And with wailing eyes terrific,
With his gleaming mace petrific,
Removed the barrings of the door.
The barrings of the door removed,
That he might hence forthwith restore—
Sorosis there and nothing more.

Up stepped one with calm demeanor,
Satan thought he oft had seen her,
Preaching of crushed "Woman's Rights."
Or some such stuff you've heard before.
"I've come," said she, "from good St. Peter,
(And though he had failed to greet her),
To you, my friends, I'll talk no sweeter,
Sweeter than I've talked before.
And unless you firmly comprehend me,
Stand aside from out the door"—
Quoth old Satan, "Never more."

Then there rose the damndest clatter—
All Sorosis 'gan to chatter,
Satan sternly looking, smiling,
Guarded well the Stygian door.
Then these vulgar, shameless scurvy,
Patrons of the myth Minerva,
Swore they'd hell turn topsy-turvy,
If they'd turned all meek before.
For nothing should avert their brazen
Faces from the brazen door,
Faces brazen evermore.

All agreed 'twould be a hazard
To slap old Satan o'er the mazzard,
And, e'er he could himself recover,
Rush their phalanx through the door.
Then, without a word reviling,
Each began their pranks beguiling,
Laughing, leaping, smirking, smiling,
Pressing closely to the door.
Satan grinning, quite corrupted,
They knocked him sprawling on the floor—
Sprawling knocked and nothing more.

Up rose Vulcan with his hammer,
"The girl who struck," he said, "I'll lam her,"
Though lath her is but doubtful grammar,
This to do he sternly swore.
But Sorosis, nothing heeding,
With their dauntless maidens leading,
Knocked the blacksmith senseless, bleeding,
Like old Satan on the floor.
Though barred by Peter out of Heaven,
Into hell their legions pour—
Pour in hell and nothing more.

Safe in hell, before they scan'd it,
They claimed a charter and they plan'd it,
A charter for "Crushed Women's Rights,"
Now and ever, ever more.
While they were their charter forming,
Without the smallest hint or warning,
Satan, with his cohorts storming,
Charged them back unto the door.
But, no further then retreating,
They fought like Amazons of yore,
And swore they'd fight forever more.

War's red wheel with horrid slaughter
Spared nor sister, mother, daughter.
Sorosis sterner than the devil
Fought through floods of hissing gore.
While they fought and fought so well,
Fierce destruction swept through hell,
But, oh, alas! Sorosis fell,
Fell in hell's hot hissing gore.
Satan then, with ghastly smiling,
Proclaimed that war in hell was o'er—
Was o'er in hell forever more.

And a council then assembling,
To judge the hags there, crushed and trembling,
Old Satan called his potentates
From the shades of purgatore.
Then said he, "There naught so gross is,
Naught one-half of half verbose is,
As the garrulous Sorosis,
Now well'ring in their reeking gore.
Though vanquished 'neath our burning vengeance,
Their tongues are wagging as before,
And will wag forever more."

While they sat in calm debating,
All agreed on extirpating
The captive gorgons, mauger gorgons,
From the Night's eternal shore.
Satan then a plan devising,
Gravely from his seat uprising,
Meek Sorosis then apprising,
Their doom was one ne'er heard before.
Their noxious bodies should be melted
To ashes in hot liquid ore!—
To ashes melted evermore.

And the ashes of the praters,
By the monster hell-born Satyrs,
In the excremental vaults
Shall be thrown forever more.
And the filth therein surprising,
And the stench from thence arising,
And the black smoke curling, rising,
Weeping angels shall deplore.
But angels and their fruitless weeping,
From the vaults of filthy gore,
Shall relieve them never more.

As solemnly he spoke their doom,
There passed through hell a silent gloom.
Jove, with all his righteous thunder,
Hoarsely muttered a mighty roar.
But the Dragon's wrath appeasing,
The satyrs grinning, mocking, teasing,
On Sorosis fiercely seizing,
Tossed them in the boiling ore.
And their ashes swiftly gath'ring,
Threw them in the vaults of gore,
To mingle there forever more.

One there was among the shameless,
Who, she lived was not quite blameless,
Whom the Angels named Sweet Annie,
"Nameless here forever more."
So fair I thought her, none e'er matched her,
And e'er the satyrs had dispatched her,
From their claws the Angels snatched her,
Snatched her to their blissful shore.
Sweet hosannas swelled in Heaven,
Sweeter ne'er was heard before—
To sweet Annie ever more.

Uriel, from his realms afar,
Sweet Annie turned into a star,
To twinkle in the firmament,
A radiant beauty evermore.
And the lustre from her beaming,
And the brilliance from her streaming,
And the splendor from her gleaming,
Shall charm the hearts of many more.
But my eyes unto that beauty,
Of the hearts of many more,
"Shall be lifted—never more."

DANGEROUS GROUND;

OR,

THE THREE SISTERS OF WOOD HOUSE FARM

With trembling hands he took them up, but had not sufficient patience to read them through. He soon caught their meaning, and his pallor deepened, his hands clenched and unclenched, drops of perspiration gathered on his forehead and Miss Happiman enjoyed his discomfiture. For a time he could not speak, so great was his rage at having been outwitted. He had declared that he would marry Fanny even if she had not a halfpenny, and disclaimed all intention of fortune hunting.

What could be do—what say? Of course Fanny was not desirable as a wife with a beggarly income of two hundred a year, which would scarcely suffice to keep him in cigars and pay for his cabs, and he could see at a glance that Miss Happiman would not be disposed to restore Fanny's fortune to her until she was satisfied that he was completely reformed.

Now, he was not in a humor to play the hypocrite for a year or two, and starve, as it were, on two hundred a year. He was desirous of living in splendor and spending his wife's money, caring little how much he made her suffer, and he saw that if he married Fanny he would have to begin a thorough and complete reformation; he would become as much a domesticated animal as a cat or a lap dog; he would have no liberty, or at least what he called liberty; his companions must be given up, his favorite haunts deserted, and he himself condemned to a numby-pamby life, which was not at all to his taste.

"I will leave you to the contemplation of those documents and send Fanny to you," said Miss Happiman, rising and leaving the room without receiving a word in reply.

Before he had recovered from his surprise Fanny entered, and expected that he would clasp her in his arms, as he had done before, but he remained seated in his chair without giving her the affectionate greeting she had anticipated.

"Philip!" she exclaimed.

"What is the meaning of all this?" he asked, throwing the deeds towards her, so that they fell on the floor at her feet. "Have you not had sense enough to see that you are being defrauded?"

"I am protected," answered Fanny, becoming suddenly frigid, as her instinct told her she had little to expect from his love.

"From whom—from me?" he went on; "I should not have harmed you or spent your money. You have done a very foolish thing; for if you had kept enough to live upon I should have remedied the wrong I did you in years gone by, and made you my wife, a position which would have been desirable for you, considering what has happened, even if you paid three thousand a year for it. How can you expect that two people like us can live on two hundred a year? My tastes are expensive."

"I thought you said, Philip, that you loved me for myself, and that you were neither mercenary nor a fortune-hunter," urged Fanny, who spoke in a very low, soft voice, tinged with an exquisite sadness.

"So I do," he said, a little abashed. "But I ask you, Fanny, if it would not be madness for you and I to marry on what is, practically speaking, nothing a year? Since you have been with your new friends you have been accustomed to luxury; as for me, I have been a spendthrift all my life, and, though I should as your husband reform, I do not say that I could give up everything which I have come to regard as a necessary. Poor as I am, I am better off than I should be if I married a poor woman."

"Very well," said Fanny; "I release you most willingly, Mr. Dashwood, from your promise, and I will try not to think harshly of you."

At that moment of torture—for it was torture to her to have to give up Philip—she was glad to think that she had been guided by Miss Happiman, and so escaped a new danger.

"Is there anything else you have to say to me?" she added; "if not, I think it will be best not to prolong this interview."

"Don't think that you are going to escape from me so easily," said Philip Dashwood, whose whole manner changed with a suddenness which was surprising. "My dear Fanny, I have the utmost possible regard for you, but at the same time I have a regard for myself which prevents me from contracting an alliance with a moneyless wife."

"I do not wish you to do so," said Fanny, still calmly, mild and gentle as an angel, though her face was so ghastly pale, and the sign of her suffering so palpable, that they would have moved a fiend to pity.

"It comes to this," exclaimed Philip Dashwood, who was obliged at last to display himself in his true colors. "I want money, and money I must have. It is absolutely necessary that I should have three hundred pounds within the next three days, and I expect you to give it me."

"If so, I should have to anticipate my income," answered Fanny, "for you know I have but two hundred, and I do not think Miss Happiman would advance me that sum, nor do I see why I should supply you with money after the sentiments you have so openly expressed to-day."

"Do you not?" he rejoined, with a bitter sneer. "Then it remains for me to enlighten you. Of course you expect to marry well some day. You will console yourself with the reflection that I was not worthy of you, and your pious friend, Miss Happiman, will do her best to convince you that you have been standing on the edge of a precipice, from falling over which she has prevented you; but if I were to blazen abroad all I know of you, what would your position be then? And I can tell you candidly that if you do not give me the three hundred I ask for in three days' time, I will speak slightingly of you wherever I may be. Sir Gervase Fanshawe seems to pay you some attention. He shall know all."

"You can but tell him that you were a bad man, Mr. Dashwood, and that you destroyed the happiness and broke the heart of a confiding girl who was young and foolish enough to believe your falsehoods; and you can but add that she had wit enough to baffle you when you came a second time equally false and treacherous," replied Fanny, who preserved her calmness wonderfully.

"That is a poetical and fanciful way of explaining our true relations, but if you are willing to run the risk of being shut out of society, Miss Garraway," he said, laying a marked emphasis on the name, "by all means please yourself. It matters very little to me."

"I have borne your insolence long enough," rejoined Fanny, whose bosom was heaving with emotion, "and I do not think I ought to allow myself to be subjected to such brutal behavior, which, however, is all I could expect from you. The proverb says that experience teaches, and it shall teach me. I will have nothing more to say to you, Mr. Dashwood, and I request you to quit this house; if you refuse to comply I shall be under the painful necessity of ringing the bell and calling upon my footman to perform the unpleasant task of forcibly ejecting you."

This display of spirit was not reckoned upon by Philip, who had hoped that his threats would have the desired effect of extorting the money he wanted from her.

He was egregiously mistaken, however, for there was a dormant energy existing in Fanny's breast which his language and conduct aroused. She was not passionate. If she had been there would have been hope for him, for when she calmed down she might have relented. She was simply hurt. Her calmness and her carefully studied language convinced him that she spoke neither in haste nor heat, and that his chance was gone. He had shot his bolt, but it had gone far wide of the mark; still, he was not inclined to give up the prospect of extorting money by threats—so low had he sunk.

"You must do what I tell you," he said. "Have you fairly considered the consequences? You dare not refuse me the money I ask for."

Fanny's only answer was to ring the bell.

He regarded her anxiously, but she would not meet his eye. His words had wounded her deeply, as he could tell from her flushed cheeks and the quick way in which she drew her breath.

"Fanny," he cried, "are you mad? Do you defy me? Think what you do? It is best to have me as a friend, even if we cannot be man and wife."

At this juncture the footman entered and looked inquiringly at Fanny, who promptly said:—

"Remove this man from my presence, and if necessary use violence to put him into the street."

"Now, sir, this way, if you please," exclaimed the footman, who, in spite of the effeminate appearance which his plush and powder gave him, was a strong, muscular fellow.

Philip attempted to move towards Fanny, but the footman seized him by the collar of his coat, and with the greatest ease dragged him to the door. There was the sound of a struggle in the passage. The noise grew fainter down the stairs, and at last the street door closed with a bang.

Then Fanny sank back on a sofa and sat gazing into the fire with dry eyes. The reaction came and her grief consumed her, but it was not the sorrow which finds vent in words or tears—it was deeper rooted that that.

"I am very miserable," she murmured; "but it is a grand revenge. He who blighted my youth, and would have blighted my womanhood, has been ignominiously turned from my house by my servant. It is a grand revenge. But oh! what has it not cost me! I feel like the famous general who won a battle and lost so many men in the fight that he said such another victory would equal a defeat, because it would cost him his entire army almost, and I am sure that another scene like the one I have just passed through would kill me."

CHAPTER XXXI.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare.

Dr. Laxton was the proprietor of one of those establishments where the water cure is adopted for the benefit of those who have been addicted to intemperance. His mansion was spacious, and, as the auctioneers' advertisements say, stood in its own grounds. Ladies and gentlemen who could afford to pay liberally for the accommodation resorted there in large numbers, and by adopting a spare system of diet, limiting their potations and taking moderate exercise, contrived to restore their shattered health and lay the foundation of habits which were of material benefit to them.

It was to Dr. Laxton's that Amanda sent Maxwell. He, poor fellow, made no opposition to her plan, and fell without difficulty into his new mode of life; his health rapidly improved and his brain became stronger, while his mind was clear and he was able to enunciate his thoughts without that painful hesitation and loss of memory which had been one of his characteristics.

Amanda came to see him every day and she made a confidant of Dr. Laxton, who was a gentleman of high principle and thoroughly conscientious and trustworthy.

"You have told me, my dear young lady," he said, "quite sufficient to make me take a more than ordinary interest in my new patient, and I assure you it will give me great pleasure to see you happily united. I trust that in a few weeks or months you will find Mr. Maxwell sufficiently recovered to lead you to the altar, and as you tell me he has no friends I shall esteem it an honor to be his best man."

Amanda thanked the doctor for his kindness and her spirits rose, though she had been unsuccessful in her efforts to discover Miss Happiman, who had sold her house in Bloomsbury, and the new occupants did not know whither she had gone.

Maxwell began to forget the episode of the snake as his brain grew stronger, and though his health was weak and he showed some signs of a weakness in the chest, which was evidenced in a short, hacking cough, he was decidedly improving.

Mr. Dines' letter to the Earl of Montargis caused that nobleman to come at once to town, in order to have an interview with the astute lawyer. He found him at his office, surrounded by papers of legal interest and absorbed in the work of the law. Bowing formally to him, he took a seat and waited for him to speak.

"I have reason to believe, my lord," began Mr. Dines, "that you would be pleased to learn the present whereabouts of a person known as Maxwell?"

"Why 'known' as Maxwell, Mr. Dines? That is his name," replied his lordship.

"There are some who say to the contrary," continued the lawyer, "though I have not paid much attention to the matter. I have been acquainted with the gentleman for some time, and used on your late father's behalf to pay him an allowance. I must say that my suspicions were frequently aroused, though I never followed the matter up. Judge of my surprise, then, when the other day I received a visit from a lady who came to consult me professionally respecting this very man and a claim which he had."

"To the title and estates of Montargis. The lady's name was Garraway. I have heard of the claim and am acquainted with the lady," said the earl, who thought it best not to mince matters. "The affair, however, is an impudent attempt at extortion, the claim itself having no foundation in fact, and it is one they can never prove."

"In that case this young man's present address will be of no earthly use to your lordship, and I have to apologise for troubling you," said Mr. Dines, looking amongst his papers, as if the matter had ceased to have any separate distinct and paramount interest for him.

"I did not say that, nor are you justified in jumping to a conclusion. Give me the address and I shall be much obliged to you, as I should like to assist the young man in emigrating. My father took a liking to him and I wish to be of service to all his pensioners."

"Dear me," said Mr. Dines, after a long search amongst his papers. "How tiresome; I seem to have lost the address. "I cannot find it anywhere."

"Mr. Dines," answered his lordship, "will it not be best for you and I to understand each other?"

"I hope we do so now," replied the attorney.

"On the contrary. You legal men deal so much in circumlocution. Pardon me if I appear rude, but we must speak plainly. You want to be paid for giving me that address. It is one I have tried to find out without success. Miss Garraway has been too clever for me in this instance as in several others. Every man has his price. That is an axiom of mine. You have yours. I am sure of it, or you would not have written to me. Tell me now how much you require to induce you to betray the confidence of your client?"

"That is a very harsh way of putting the question, and one I do not like; ask me how much I will take to oblige the son of my old patron, the late Earl of Montargis, and I shall be able to give you an estimate."

"Put it how you like, it comes to the same thing in the end. What is your price? You see, Dines, this man is only dangerous to me when in the hands of a designing and ambitious woman like Miss Garraway. Removed from the sphere of her influence he is as harmless as a dried snake."

"If I help you in this matter, my lord, I must have five thousand pounds," answered Dines.

"What will you do for it?"

"Betray the interests of my client, as you delicately but suggestively put it," said Dines. "Of course, the mere address is not worth that sum; but I will see in what safe way the man can be removed. The old, vulgar style of knocking a man on the head or shooting him is out of date. I should say, if Maxwell could be got away from his present place of security and set loose in a low part of Wapping or Whitechapel, with a hundred pounds in his pocket, some diamond rings and a valuable gold watch, some kind person would do the business for us and rid us of him forever."

"That is an experiment worth trying; the suggestion shows that you are a practical man and full of resources, Dines. The idea is well worth the five thousand pounds and you shall have it. Leave everything in your hands, and will, when I get back to my hotel, send you a check for half that amount on account."

"I think it is a slight improvement on the 'sacrifice' attempted to be made by the serpent worshipers of which I have had an account," remarked the attorney, putting his little fingers in his waistcoat pockets and leaning back in his chair, while a smile overspread his countenance.

"I will thank you, Mr. Dines, to follow my instructions without any comment," replied the earl, with dignity.

"I meant no offence, my lord," said the attorney.

"Possibly not; but you are my paid servant. I should like you to do what you are paid for, without taking liberties, if such a thing is possible."

"Oh, certainly!" answered Mr. Dines, biting his lips.

"When shall I hear from you? I stay in town for a fortnight," continued the Earl of Montargis.

"As soon as I have anything to communicate I will not fail to let you know, and you may rely upon it you will find me a diligent servant."

The lawyer laid an emphasis on the last words, which passed unnoticed by the earl, who simply said, as he rose to go:—

"That is all I require."

When he was gone Mr. Dines muttered to himself:—

"How haughty these aristocrats are. I should like to teach him a lesson of civility."

However, he did not allow his resentment to deprive him of the inclination to work for the handsome amount promised him, and when the specified check arrived he put himself in the train and proceeded to Richmond to commence his campaign against the unhappy Maxwell.

Although Dr. Laxton advertised that he lived at Richmond, it was in reality at Petersham that he had his habitation, which is some distance down the hill.

The large house which he resided faced the park, and was entered through iron gates; a walk led through spacious grounds, well wooded, having its flower beds in excellent order, archery ground, croquet lawn, a place for quoits, bowls, and all outdoor amusements.

Mr. Dines was walking by the side of the carriage drive on the turf, which, from long rolling, was soft and yielding to his feet, when he saw a tall, thin and rather pale young man shooting in a melancholy and listless manner at a target, which his frequent arrows never hit, by any strange combination of chances contrived to hit.

A GAME OF "POKER."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER BY
"THE LOW COMEDIAN."

In Keithsburg, Ill., there doth dwell two colored American citizens (see 15th Amendment) named respectively Smithison and Johnson. The former runs a barber shop in that town, and the latter is a "friend of the family." Now, although neither understand much about "poker," yet it was their constant delight to indulge in that game. Smithison had a pack, "born of many others." One day Johnson came in and proposed a game, saying, at the same time, "I've got a stake dat can't be bluffed." Smithison bet fifty cents on his first "hand," and in an excited manner Johnson "raised him," when the following dialogue ensued:—

SMITHISON.—"Now deres no use talkin', Mr. Johnson, de money must be mine; I see your twenty-five cent raise and go you fifty better."

JOHNSON.—"I've got a pile dat can't be bluffed. I see your fifty, and go you twenty-five better, yet."

SMITHISON.—"Now dere isen't not no use ob talkin', de money must be mine, so Mr. Julius Johnson I go you fifty more better."

JOHNSON.—"Look y'har, Mr. Smithison, my pile can't be bluffed; I go you seventy-five better yet."

SMITHISON.—"De money must be mine, Mr. Johnson; I go you a nudder fifty better."

JOHNSON.—"I tole you one't for all dat my pile can't be bluffed. I see dat fifty and dam if I dont go you a whole dollar better."

SMITHISON.—"You is just frowin' your money 'way, chile, but dere's no use ob talkin', Mr. Johnson, de money must be mine; I'll go you twenty-five cents better."

JOHNSON.—"Didn't I tole you dat my pile can't be bluffed? I go you a nudder twenty-five yet."

SMITHISON.—"Now look y'har, you is foolish, you is. I don't want to take all your wealth 'way, so I'll just 'call' you, for de money must be mine."

JOHNSON.—"Well, what's yer got?"

SMITHISON.—"Why, I've got four aces. Ha, ha! didn't I tole you de money must be mine, Mr. Julius Johnson? Rake ober dat pile."

JOHNSON.—"No you dont, for I've got five aces. Didn't I tole you dat my pile couldn't be bluffed? Guess I'll rake de pile. Ha, ha!"

A blank look came over Mr. Jones Smithison's "phiz," and, in a voice suggestive of a ruined gambler, he said:—"De money's yours, Mr. Johnson."

QUIN, THE ACTOR.—When the above-named artist was stage manager of Drury Lane Theatre, he often treated literary aspirants in a very off-hand style. On one occasion, when a gentleman offered him tragedy, Quin put it in his pocket and forgot all about it, and when next he met the author, although he had never looked at it, told him that it was unsuitable. "If so, please to let me have it again," said our author. "There it lies in the window," answered Quin. The author went to the window and found a play there, but it was a comedy. "This is not mine." "Why, then," said Quin, "I have certainly lost it." "Lost my play!" "Yes," said Quin; "but there's a drawer full of tragedies and comedies, take any two of them instead."

A VALUABLE DOG.—A German sued his neighbor for killing his dog. The justice asked the defendant if he did kill the dog. "Be sure I knit him, but let him prove it," was the dogged reply. This being satisfactory, the plaintiff was asked—with a view of assessing damages—how much the dog was worth. "The dog was worth noting, but, since he was so mean as to kill him, he shall pay de full value of him." That picture would apply to a good many lawsuits.

I NEVER WILL FORGET.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

No, lovely lady, hear me swear
Unto thee on my bended knee,
Or even before Justice or
A notary, memory holds her sway—
As long as in night my life shall set—
And dark oblivion o'er me roll,
I swear I never will forget!

The oaths of other men may be
In falsehood framed—as light as air—
Of such as these I nothing know—
Of such as these I nothing care!
I swear I never will forget
The size, the shape, the breadth, the height—
In fact the appalling presence of
The chignon that you wear to-night! J. H. B.

Sight-seeing in Paris.—No. 24.

ST. CLOUD—THE FETE OF ST. CLOUD—AMERICAN OMNIBUSES—VERSAILLES—MARIE ANTOINETTE'S APARTMENTS—GRAND TRIANON.

The palace and park of St. Cloud is about five miles from Paris and is the summer residence of the present emperor, the situation of which is charming and commands a splendid view of Paris. This imperial residence was built in 1572 by a rich banker, from whom it passed into the hands, successively, of four bishops of Paris, after which it was bought by Louis the Fourteenth and given to his brother the Duc d'Orleans, whose family possessed it until Louis the Sixteenth bought it for Marie Antoinette. Some very remarkable historical events are recorded of St. Cloud, for there Henry the Third, of France, was assassinated by a Jesuit priest; Henrietta, wife of Charles the First, of England, died there, and on Nov. 10th, 1799, Napoleon Bonaparte, by a coup d'etat, seized upon the government of France, and there, in 1815, the capitulation of Paris was signed. In 1830 the fatal decrees of Charles the Tenth, which caused the revolution, was signed there, and likewise the king received the earliest news of the bitter fruits they produced; it was also occupied by Queen Victoria, in 1855, while on a visit to the emperor and empress. The chief features of the interior are the grand vestibule, in which are several fine specimens of sculpture, also the grand staircase, facing which is a large and handsome painting, representing the reception of the queen of England, by the emperor, in 1855. From this staircase the visitor is conducted to the Salon de Mars, a splendid apartment, filled with paintings and tapestry, and thence to the Galerie d'Apollon, in which Prince Napoleon was baptized by the Pope in 1805, and Napoleon the First was married to Marie Louise, of Austria, in 1810. This gallery is adorned with a fine collection of pictures and several very handsome Buhl and tortoise shell cabinets. From this apartment we pass to the Salon de Diane, containing a collection of pictures, chiefly portraits, and next the Chapel, which, although small, is well proportioned and highly decorated. From there the visitor is directed to the Salon de Venus, in which are some very fine specimens of the famous Gobelins Tapestry. Adjacent is the Salon de Minerve, containing two good busts of Napoleon the First and Prince Eugene. To the right is the library, and we next come to the Salon de Mercure, formerly the council chamber of Napoleon the First, but now converted into a billiard room. The Salon de l'Aurore comes next, and communicates with the staircase of the Empress, opening to her Majesty's private apartments, which are magnificent. Adjoining is the Emperor's salon, which was formerly occupied by Marie Antoinette. This concludes the sights of the palace and the visitor then enters the park, a beautiful place, abounding in charming walks, magnificent fountains, flowers, shrubbery, &c. The grand jet d'eau, or principal fountain, when in full play, rises with immense force to the height of 140 feet, and throws up 5,000 gallons of water a minute. These fountains only play once in two weeks.

The Fete of St. Cloud begins on the 7th of September and lasts three weeks, and all Paris may be seen out of doors. The Frenchmen are now in their glory, eating and drinking, and joining in the merry games. On the grassy slopes are Punch and Judy shows, jugglers, tight-rope dancers, acrobats and every species of itinerant exhibitions to be seen at a fair, and some of them manage to reap a pretty good harvest during the three weeks.

On the morning of Sunday, Aug. 22, we started for Versailles, distance about eleven miles from Paris. There are several routes to this charming place, but we took the American omnibus or tramway. These are large omnibuses, with seats on the top. They start from the Place de Louvre, and when they reach the Place de la Concorde, the omnibus' wheels are taken off and railroad wheels substituted, there being a track from here to Versailles. The vehicle is drawn by horses, and the journey occupies about an hour. A stranger would be well secure a seat on the top, as he has a fine view of the country in the vicinity of Paris. The road passes through Auteuil, Sevres, St. Cloud and a number of other places, and terminates close to the palace.

In reaching Versailles, the first point got to is the Palace. On approaching the building the eye will be struck quite as much by the singularity as by the grandeur of its details. The grand court occupies the front, separated from the Place de Armes by a palisading. This court is 300 feet in breadth, and is adorned with several groupes of sculpture. Those on the right represent France's victories over Austria and Prussia; on the left, France's victories over Spain, peace and plenty. In front of the buildings facing the court are sixteen marble statues of remarkable Frenchmen, including princes, marshals of the empire, &c. At the upper end of the court is an equestrian statue of Louis the Fourteenth, beyond which is the Cour Royale and the Cour Marine, surmounting the old Chateau built by Louis the Thirteenth, around which a series of busts of eminent men is erected. On entering the Palace, guides will show you everything worthy of notice at a charge of one franc an hour. The Galerie des Battailes is a magnificent apartment, and contains a series of pictures from the period of Louis the Fourteenth to the present time, including the most remarkable battles fought by Napoleon the First, and those in Algiers during the reign of Louis Philippe. We next pass to the Salle de Opera or Theatre, which is of no great consequence, except in a historical point of view, through having been the scene of the celebrated banquet given by Louis the Sixteenth to the Guardes du Corps, in 1789, the consequences of which were fatal to the royal family, the populace having been exasperated at the threat of the troops to fire upon them. In 1855, a grand ball was given there by the present emperor and Queen Victoria. From this apartment a gallery 300 feet in length, containing busts, statues, etc., of eminent men of the time of Louis the Fifteenth is passed through to the Salle de Croisades, a suite of fine apartments containing the coats of arms of the French knights who fought in the Crusades, and there are also deposited the cedar gates of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, at Rhodes, presented by the Sultan Mahmoud, to the Prince de Joinville, in 1836. Between the entrances to this apartment is a splendid monument of Ferdinand of Arragon and Elizabeth of Castille; the ceilings and walls are also covered with the armorial bearings of the French knights who fought in the Holy Land. In the succeeding series of apartments are portraits of the marshals and generals of the Second Empire, and several remarkable pictures representing scenes of the first revolution, the battles of the Crimea, and the Italian campaign of the present Emperor. The Salle de Constantine contains large pictures illustrative of the taking of Ancona, Antwerp and St. Jean d'Ulloa. In an adjoining salon is a large picture of the surprise and capture of Abd-el Kader. We next come to a higher suite of rooms, containing a series of pictures of no great importance, and from this part of the palace, descending by another flight of stairs, a suite of ten rooms is reached looking towards the gardens, the principal features of which are a number of historical paintings ranging from 1795 to 1830. At the end are two statues of France and Peace, where you also have a good view of the interior of the Chapel, the place of worship attached to the palace. The Grandes Appartementes were next visited, and they compose the entire floor, the rooms on the north having been occupied by the king and on the south by the queen. The pictures here represent events in the life of Louis the Fourteenth. The most important of this series of apartments are the Salons d'Hercule and de l'Abundance, which open into that of Venus, Diane, Mars and Apollon. These are also very fine apartments, with vaulted ceilings, and filled with choice historical paintings. We now pass the Gallery of Louis the Fourteenth, his library and dining-room, and enter his bed-room, where the bed still remains on which that monarch died, and this room has not been occupied since his death by any king or member of the royal family.

It was upon the balcony of this apartment that Louis the Sixteenth, Marie Antoinette and her children appeared to the revolutionary mob in 1789, who were screaming with fury in the court below for their blood. The west room is the ante-chamber of the king's bed-room, in which Louis and Marie always dined on Sundays when they occupied Versailles. The queen's apartments are also reached by this vestibule. We now return to the Salon de la Paix, and then to the bed-room of Marie Antoinette, from which room that unhappy queen was obliged to fly to the King's apartment on the nights of the 5th and 6th of October, 1789, when the palace was attacked by the revolutionary mob, her life having only been saved by the fidelity of one of the Swiss guards on duty as a sentinel. The pictures in this apartment are representations of important events in French history. Passing onwards, the Salle des Gardes is reached. This contains the picture of the coronation of Napoleon the First and the distribution of the Eagles to the Legions, the Battle of Abukir and two portraits of Napoleon the First. Next follow two smaller rooms, containing pictures of the campaign of 1793-95, and portraits of Bonaparte's marshals and generals. We now come upon the Escalier des Princes, where the royal children were housed in former times. The point of observation in this department is the Galerie de l'Empire, consisting of fourteen rooms filled with reminiscences of the Bonaparte family. Thence the stair-case leads to the Galerie des Marines, consisting of five rooms, also containing portraits, and to the Galerie des Tambeaux, the chief feature of which is a curious collection of plaster models of the monuments of remarkable Frenchmen. These are only the principal features, as I don't suppose I saw half the curiosities in this vast collection, for to see the Gallery of Versailles artistically it would require a week.

We now leave the palace and take a ramble through the garden, this being a repetition of the Fete Napoleon which took place in Paris a week previous. The gardens were crowded

THE PRIZE RING

OF THE OLDEN TIME,

JACK RANDALL,

THE PRIME IRISH LAD

OR,

THE "NONPAREIL."

His Life, and Battles in the Prize Ring.

Randall, from his last victory over the cautious, scientific and game Turner, was fully considered as having worked his way to the top of the tree, and it was also asserted by many of the most experienced amateurs connected with the patronage of the prize ring that the late phenomenon, Dutch Sam, in the best of his days, must have yielded to the potent arm of the prime Irish lad. It is a positive fact that Randall never received instructions from any pugilist whatever, and it was owing to his natural mode of fighting that he gained all his conquests. It is true that Turner never decidedly took the lead in one round, but he appeared conspicuous in many of them, and while Randall was fibbing his nob, he, in turn, was endeavoring to knock the wind out of his opponent. This latter essential quality to a boxer was soon found to be defective in Turner. As early as the third round he was piping, which either proved that his condition might have been better or the tremendous hits of Randall floored condition as well as pluck. But it astonished every one present to see how soon Turner recovered himself upon this spoiling suit, from the advantages of long sparring. Randall was not long in acquiring the appellation of the "prime Irish lad," but his talents for serving out were so manifest, from his conquests over West Country Dick, Hall, Belasco and Parish, in the short space of seven months, that he was hailed the Nonpareil, and this last victory fully established his claim to the above title. In short, Randall was nothing but an out-and-outer and Turner an out-and-outer too; and, although defeated, he raised himself in the estimation of the sporting world.

REMNANTS OF THE FIGHT.—Daylight on Sunday morning discovered the remains of several gigs lying along the road, which had been floored from coming in contact with each other from the narrowness and badness of the roads. Beds could not be procured at any of the inns, and, in consequence, hundreds were compelled to travel in the dark. The horses were all dead beat, the long faces not to be described and the cleaning out immense. Near the dwelling of Randall—the Cock, in Tottenham Court road—hundreds of the sons of Hibernia were waiting for the result of the event; and, upon the arrival of Jack, the applause he received almost rent the air, the noise was so great. The mob around Belcher's door was beyond all precedent. In the Borough Market Cribb's house was equally besieged, and those of Harmer, Oliver and Burns crowded and surrounded. The sale of newspapers was as great as if some important victory had been achieved on the continent, so much anxiety was expressed on this battle. The first news which arrived in London was that Turner had gained the day. Numerous bets were made upon the information, and the hoax was not dispelled till ten o'clock at night.

Turner arrived in town on the Sunday night; and, notwithstanding the numerous blows he had received upon his face, it was astonishing to see how quickly the appearance of severity had left it.

Randall, by way of showing his gaiety, set-to at the Three Compasses, in Holborn, on the Monday evening after the fight, for the benefit of Gregson. During the fight, after one hour and a quarter had elapsed, while the combatants were sitting close together upon the knees of their seconds, Turner said to Randall, "We both can't win it." "No," replied Jack, "but I mean to win it, though." The losses on the above fight, in all parts of England, Ireland and Wales, were immense; but, however heavy they might have been, there was no grumbling among the amateurs about the conduct of the men.

An out-and-outer is Randall's due,
And Turner's an out-and-outer, too,
Like such trumps there are but few—
Towards Victory!

In consequence of Martin having defeated Scroggins, after a severe contest of upwards of two hours, Turner, it seems, viewed the Master of the Rolls as a hero worthy of notice, and a challenge to Martin was the result; but, owing to the following unexpected circumstance, it did not take place and a match was made between Randall and Martin. The latter boxer felt anxious to raise himself in the estimation of the fancy, and, without any hesitation, he gave the preference to Randall for an opponent, the Nonpareil not being a beaten man.

SPORTING DINNER AT FRANKLIN'S, ON TUESDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1818, TO CELEBRATE RANDALL'S VICTORY.—An amateur of distinction presided upon this occasion and the meeting was most respectably attended. After an excellent dinner had been served up, the cloth removed and some toasts connected with the prize ring had been drank, the chairman, in a manly style of eloquence, expatiated upon the advantages of scientific pugilism, in a national point of view, towards flooring dandyism and levelling that sort of effeminacy which was making such rapid progress at the present period in degenerating the true character of Englishmen. The advantages of true courage and game, he observed, had been felt in a most important victory upon the continent—a victory which had decided the fate of Europe, overthrown tyranny and oppression, and which, in a principal degree, was owing to the nature, hardihood and pluck of Englishmen. To increase the breed—to promote true courage upon all occasions and to perpetuate the honor of his country was the only aim of all the admirers of English boxing. The President of the Daffy Club occupied the deputy chair and contributed much towards the harmony of the evening. Upon discussing the merits of Randall and Martin a noble Lord present proposed a match between the above pugilists, which was accepted by the friends of the latter, subject to the following articles of agreement:—Randall was backed against Martin £150 to £100. To be a fair stand up fight, half minute time; to take place within 30 miles of London and upon the last Tuesday in April. Ten pounds a side were deposited, and £75 on the part of Randall and £50 on the side of Martin were to be made at Burns', the Sun, in Windmill street, Haymarket, on Thursday, the 31st of December, 1818, and the completion of the £250 at Frankim's, on the 31st of March, 1819, deposited by Burns and the party concerned.

Betting immediately commenced with spirit and 20 to £20 was laid on Randall, but, nevertheless, the sporting world did not like fighting so much at odds and assert that it spoilt the betting, as the stakes laid were 6 to 4. It was almost certain that Martin would prove above a stone heavier than Randall on the day of fighting, and it was also thought by some of the steady ones that it was giving a chance away.

The prime Irish lad had nothing to do personally in making the match, but the courage of Randall would not let him refuse it when asked by his lordship. It was expected to prove a sporting fight, but Martin, it was thought, ought not to be held too cheap. It is true the baker was not so good a pugilist as his opponent, but time was allowed him to repair that defect in practice. In other points Martin had materially the advantage; therefore, upon a calculative view of the subject, the wise ones insisted it was not above 5 to 4. The members of the rolls fraternity were all upon the alert, in consequence of their hero coming so soon again into play.

TURN-UP EXTRAORDINARY BETWEEN RANDALL AND BURNS.—Some little misunderstanding, it appears, occurred between the above pugilists concerning the fight between Randall and Martin, when they immediately setto, although at Franklin's small parlor, and, neither of them being compos mentis, they agreed to decide it on the spot. Burns had rather the best of the throws, but Randall took the lead in hitting the unstook his opponent's head for a drum, he beat such a tattoo upon it. It was asserted that the prime Irish lad could be backed against Burns for £100, in order to fill up his time previous to his fight with Martin.

Upon making the sums of £75 on the part of Randall and £50 on that of Martin, good at Burns', the Sun, in Windmill street, Haymarket, on Thursday, Dec. 31, 1818, the day of fighting was altered to the 4th of May, in order that it might not interfere with the races at Newmarket.

AT RANDALL'S MOMENTARY TURN-UP WITH JACK BROWN, during the fight between West Country Dick and Abbot, in Oliver's back long room, in Westminster, on Tuesday evening, March 2d, 1819. Randall was the second for Dick and Brown was officiating as bottle holder for Abbot. The interest of the battle was suddenly interrupted in consequence of Randall asserting that Hopping Ned, in his character of bottle holder, had behaved unfairly towards West Country Dick. Explanations were useless—words were out of the question—and an immediate appeal to fists was the result. This turn-up lasted for four rounds, and the peculiar forte of Randall was never seen in a more striking point of view. In the above short space of time the nob of his opponent was so changed that it might have been taken for a terrific likeness of the Saracen's Head. Scroggins good naturedly interfered to prevent Randall from fighting, by which means the arms of the latter were held, when Jolly Young Brown, the sprig of Myrtle, in the cause of his father, gave the prime Irish lad a rear facer, but the young one was floored for his interference.

GROWING TOWNS IN THE FAR WEST.

SPORTING MATTERS, ETC.

CHARLESTON, MO., April 10.

FRIEND CLIPPER.—Since the date of my last letter our citizens have made rapid strides in the way of improvement. Over a dozen of substantial, comfortable dwellings have been started, and are now rapidly approaching completion, and all along the line of the Iron Mountain R. R., from St. Louis to Belmont (opposite Columbus, Ky.), on the western bank of the "father of waters," new towns and cities are growing up like mushrooms on a May morning. This place, however, by a recent act of the legislature has been incorporated as a city, which gives it additional prestige. Besides this it is the county seat. Here our worthy sheriff J. T. Jackson and his subordinates reside. We possess many natural and artificial advantages, which but few cities in the Mississippi valley can boast of. . . . A number of our leading citizens, who admire "the noblest of all animals," the horse, are about to lay out a mile track on a beautiful prairie just verging on the city, and as level as any of your Long Island tracks. We have some very fine horses here, comparatively speaking. Of course we have no Dexters yet, but then, you know, the world was not made in a day. One of our young merchants, Morris Moran, has a beautiful young dark bay pacing mare, 15 hands high, that can make her mile in 2:47; for which he claims the name of Katy Douglas. She has never been trained, and gives promise of great speed. Levi & Black, confectioners and fur dealers, have a beautiful colt, for which they claim the name of Gen. T. Jackson. He is a bright sorrel, 5 years old, 15¾ hands high, long mane and tail, beautifully curved neck, well-formed head, clear, bright, intelligent eye, and limbs as clean as a whistle. He can trot now in about 2:52. I do not know his pedigree. Mark Eden, attorney, has a very fine grey messenger stallion, 16 hands high, and seven years old, that can trot his mile in three minutes. . . . . But our citizens are not confined to the sports of the turf alone. The faithful, well-trained dog and gun are great and profitable sources of amusement with a majority of them, who are not familiar with the peculiar enjoyments of eastern cities. There is a lake here which is known by the name of Big Lake. It is an inlet of the Mississippi, is about nine miles long and it is at all times literally covered with ducks, brandts and geese, and the woods skirting the lake are thick with wild turkeys and other game. I know one man—an Irishman by the name of Pat Kelly, who follows hunting for a living—that bagged over 600 ducks on the lake in less than seven days, from which he realised $150 in Cairo. This may seem incredulous, but it is nevertheless a fact. Can any of your New York sportsmen beat that?—Yours, etc.

G. F. D.

A NOTED GAMBLER IMPRISONED.—Polack has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment at Baden for picking a pocket. A few years ago he was noted as one of the leading gamblers at Baden, winning £10,000 in one season, and at another time bleeding the bank to the extent of £50,000. He was very fashionable and elegant in those days, but he was not satisfied with genteel gambling, and took to robbing people in railway cars and to picking pockets. Hence the Polackian incarceration.

THE TURF.

AMERICAN TURF.

The Fifty Mile Ride.

From the Gold Hill, Nevada, Evening News, we extract the following detailed account of the great race against time (the result of which we gave recently), in which John Faylor accomplished the task of riding fifty miles in two hours, for a stake of $1,000:—

At just 12 o'clock Faylor made his appearance, mounted and ready for the fray. He is a light-built, dark-complexioned young man, and weighs 118 pounds. After a few minutes' preliminary arrangements of details, away he dashed on the first heat. We have never seen a better rider. Perfectly erect and steady, he rode firmly in his stirrups, and seemed no impeding weight for a horse to carry, but on the contrary, light, lively, and anything but a dead weight. Johnny knows just how to ride a horse, that's certain. We did not time all the heats separately as that would be too lengthy a matter for publishment, but the shortest was made in two minutes and two seconds; the average was about two minutes and eight seconds. Some of the horses he rode twice round at a single heat, and one three times; most of them, however, he rode only once round. At the further side of the track, in the vicinity of the half mile pole, he had fresh horses also waiting, and had to change at that point on two or three occasions. When coming in on the home-stretch, if the horse he rode was observed to be falling, a fresh horse was taken out to meet him and exchanged; this was done also two or three times. One very interesting feature to notice was the extreme rapidity and facility with which he changed horses at the stand. A fresh one, ready saddled and bridled was held there, and when he rode up two or three men would seize his horse and assist him to leap down and into the saddle of the other horse, these changes thus occupying far less time than it takes for us to write about them. Indeed, the last dozen or twenty heats he was not allowed to touch the ground at all, but was simply picked off one saddle and placed into the other, with a slap bestowed upon his horse's rump in order to start him off in a hurry. It was a little the liveliest horse navigation most people ever saw. About the twenty-third mile remark was observed coming from Faylor's mouth and one ear, he being subject to bleeding at the lungs on such occasions, under the fearfully severe exercise, but as he kept a "stiff upper lip," and about that time also shouted for some one to get his watch and bet that on the race, we felt assured that he would live through it—he did. About 2 o'clock, P. M., he finished the race; time, one hour, fifty-eight minutes and thirty-three seconds—within the two hours. As he rode in from that concluding heat, looking still quite vigorous, and anything but exhausted, he was taken from the saddle amid loud cheers of triumph, and hilariously carried on the shoulders of his friends to the front of the judges' stand, from which the result was announced immediately. Faylor being called upon for a speech, replied, thanking his friends for their efforts in his behalf, and expressing the hope that he would be as successful in the great race he is to run of 200 miles in ten hours, at Jerome Park, New York, in May next. Faylor had procured fifteen horses, but he had to use three more on account of some of them getting lame."

PEDIGREE OF LIDA GRISSOM.—This wonderfully promising filly, that won the two year old stakes at New Orleans on the first of the meeting, distancing both her opponents, is by War Dance, and the first of his stock that has appeared in public. War Dance is by Lexington, out of Reel, the dam of Lecompte, Lexington's great rival. She never appeared on the turf until 7 or 8 years old, owing to the interruption of racing in the South caused by the war, and he broke down in his first race. Lida Grissom, who is named after one of Kentucky's fairest daughters, is engaged in the Dinner Party Stakes at Baltimore. According to the Northern turf, Lida is now a three year old.

TROTTING AT NEW ORLEANS.—A trot for a purse of $250, with $50 for the second horse, came off on the track of the Mechanics' and Agricultural Fair Association on the 4th inst. The course was in excellent order, and the attendance large; among the spectators was Jem Mace, with a party of friends. The contesting horses were T. Rouch's s. g. John Morrissey; R. Johnson's s. g. Volunteer; C. Fife's s. g. Daylight, and J. Shawhan's r. g. Dan Shawhan. The betting was $60 to $40 on Morrissey, who won the race in three straight heats. Time, 2:37¼, 2:31¼, 2:32.

REVIVAL OF THE FASHION COURSE.—The prevalent impression that the Fashion Course was to be numbered among the things of the past proves to be unfounded, for Messrs. William H. Saunders & Sons, who also own the Clyde Trotting Park in this state, have le sed it for a term of five years, and intend using strenuous efforts to restore its ancient fame and popularity. The new lessees announce a four days' trotting meeting, to be held on May 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st, when the sum of $9,500 will be given for competition.

THE BEACON PARK, BOSTON—CHANGE OF NAME.—The name of the old Riverside Course at Boston has been changed, and it now rejoices in the title of Beacon Park. The Boston Trotting Association will hold their spring and fall meetings on the newly-named track, the former being fixed for the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th June, when purses to the amount of $25,000 will be given for competition.

RACING IN FRANCE.—At the Vincennes races, on the 10th inst., Fine Champagne won the Polygone Stakes, Personal took the prize of Paris, Mon Ami the prize of Joinville, and Jennie the prize of Dumesnil.

THE ENGLISH TURF.

The Epsom Spring Meeting.

SABINUS THE DOUBLE WINNER OF THE CITY AND SUBURBAN HANDICAP AND THE GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES —LATEST BETTING ON THE CHESTER CUP, TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS AND DERBY.

The Epsom Spring Meeting, which commenced on the 29th ult., is regarded as one of the most important of the year, the two great handicaps, the City and Suburban and the Great Metropolitan Stakes, being then run for. A few years ago the latter race was regarded as one of the most important handicaps of the year, and since its establishment in 1846 we find among its winners such renowned racers as Stilton, Virago (confessedly the best three year old of her day on the turf), Fandango, Cannobie, St. Albans, the Chester Cup and Derby Victor, and The Drummer. But of late years it has gradually decreased in public favor, and the shorter race, the City and Suburban, a dash of one mile and a quarter, has supplanted it in popularity with the owners of horses as well as with the great mass of race-goers. This year the betting on the City and Suburban has been of an unusually heavy character, and, taken in conjunction with the fact that the speculation on the Liverpool Grand National was much heavier than it had been before, it is clear that the financial condition of the turf is in a highly satisfactory condition. So extensive were the transactions on this race that horses that were backed for thousands and thousands of dollars, started at comparatively outside prices in the betting; the result of such an amount of outlay, in ordinary times, would have been to make any horse a prominent favorite for any race in which he was engaged. The sport commenced with the Trial Stakes, which brought out a field of eleven runners, but the same interest was not attached to this race as there was last year, when the Derby and St. Leger winners, Blue Gown and Formosa, met the fleet miler Vespasian, and the mare was only beaten a short head by Sir Joseph Hawley's crack. The three year old filly Pate, a daughter of the Derby and St. Leger winners, Macaroni and Songstress, who had shown a fine turn of speed last year, was made the favorite, her price at starting being 5 to 2. She cut down her opponents with the greatest ease and won in a common canter. The Nursery Plate, for three year olds (instead of as hitherto for two year olds, who are prevented running in any race after the month of May by the new rule of the Jockey Club) was won by Sir Bevys Boy, a son of Kettledrum, from a field of ten, the favorite, a filly by Cramond, out of Seamstress, being only able to gain third place. Then came the great event, "big with the fate of thousands" of dollars, the City and Suburban, for which twenty-eight horses, the largest field since Adventurer's year (1863), sported silk. The betting at the start was 9 to 2 against Miss Dayrell, 6 to 1 Sabinus, 100 to 15 Oxonian, 100 to 1 Gertrude, 100 to 9 Douglas, 40 to 1 Claudius, 100 to 7 Geant des Batailles, 25 to 1 Lady Blanche filly, and 50 to 1 against Vagabond, Vestminster and Blue Belle colt; and 1 each against Border Knight, Myosotis and Simplon, and 50 to 1 against any other. The trainers of the leading favorites were unusually sanguine of winning with their respective horses. Oxonian, trained by William Day, and tried so highly that he declared he could not lose, came with a tremendous rush into the betting, and at one time was most in demand of anything, but the immense support awarded to Miss Dayrell gave her the premiership. Sabinus retreated a point in the market quotations, but this did not shake the confidence of her owner and trainer. The operation of castration had been performed on him to correct his hitherto ungovernable temper, and it had effected its object perfectly. His rider, Rowell, waited with him until turning into the straight at Tattenham Corner, when he let him out, and, fairly wearing down his opponents one by one, won like a racehorse easily by a length; his weight was 7st 9lbs. Claudius, 3 yrs., 81 lbs., was second, three-quarters of a length before Miss Dayrell, 4 yrs., 104lbs.; Douglas, 3 yrs., 78lbs., fourth; Newsman, 3 yrs., 85lbs., fifth, and Oxonian, 4 yrs., 98lbs., sixth. The time of the race (1¼ mile) was 2 min. 17½ secs., and the value of the stakes $7,350. The winner is by Newminster, dam Vesta, and is full brother to Vespasian. He was purchased when a yearling by the late Mr. John Stephenson (the leviathan bookmaker, who committed suicide last year) for £3,500, and Mr. Graham, the great London gin distiller and owner of Formosa, Regalia, The Drummer, and other horses, became half owner of him. On Mr. Stephenson's death Mr. Graham became his sole owner, but his nominations in the Derby, Two Thousand Guineas, St. Leger and Grand Prize of Paris have all become void in consequence of his nominator's death.

The following day the racing commenced with the South Western Railway Plate, which the old Stewards' Cup victor, Tibthorpe, won cleverly. Then came the Prince of Wales' Stake, for which thirteen horses came to the post. Sir Joseph Hawley's one time Derby favorite, Rosicrucian, whom we always maintained was a better horse than Blue Gown, and with whom he declared to win instead of the actual victor, was made the favorite, and he won gallantly, carrying the steadying weight of 126 lbs. The interest now became centred in the race for the great Metropolitan Stakes, about 2¼ miles, for which fourteen started, the betting being 6 to 4 against Sabinus, 100 to 30 The Briton, 8 to 1 Oxonian, 10 to 1 Agnes Wickfield colt, 100 to 8 each against Jarnac, Threatener and Cherie, 100 to 6 Silvershoe, 25 to 1 Lady Blanche filly, and 50 to 1 Clemence. Oxonian was the only one of the City and Suburban winners that was brought out for this race, and his party again stood him so staunchly that he left off third favorite. The race proved a hollow affair, for, after the horses had gone half a mile, Sabinus, who carried 93lbs, including 10lbs penalty, was pulling over all his opponents, and only required his head to be loosed to fairly spread eagle the field. He cantered in an easy winner by four lengths, his jockey leisurely looking behind him, and so full of running was he that he continued his gallop for half a mile further before his rider could pull him up. Jarnac, 3 yrs, 83lbs., was second, and The Briton, 4 yrs, 94lbs., third. The success of Sabinus was most enthusiastically received, and Mr. Graham was congratulated at his horse's achieving the double vicfory in the City and Suburban and Great Metropolitan, a performance which the flying Virago had accomplished before in 1854. The nearest approach to it was by Adamas, who, in 1857, won the City and Suburban, but was beaten by a head in the Metropolitan by Poodle. Last year Mr. Graham won this race with the Drummer, who had finished second to Alpinstock for the shorter race the day before. The moment Sabinus passed the post he at one bound jumped to 3 to 1 in the betting quotations for the Chester Cup, and with the stipulation of a start for the money, $10,000 to $5,000 would have been taken. It is lucky for the Derby favorites that Sabinus is disqualified for that race, for he would, undoubtedly, have been the leading horse in the betting, and his running shows him up to Derby form. It will be remembered that St. Albans won the Metropolitan and Chester Cup at three years old, in 1860, and although lameness prevented him starting for the Derby, he carried off the St. Leger in clever style. The value of the Metropolitan this year was £5,960; the report that Mr. Graham and his party had won a fabulous amount on the race is unfounded, although a large stake was, undoubtedly, realised by the victory.

The friends and admirers of the late Mr. H. Dixon (the popular sporting writer under the nom-de-plume of the The Druid) are engaged in raising a subscription for his widow and family. The leading noblemen and racing men are taking an active interest in promoting the affair, and a handsome amount will, undoubtedly, be realised.

The latest betting on the Chester Cup shows Sabinus at the head of quotations, 3 to 1 being taken about him. The Starter (who won the Goodwood stakes) is staunchly backed at 100 to 6; Sederolfe, Glenfallock, and Blandford, at 25 to 1 each; Captivator at 100 to 3, and Cherie at 40 to 1. For the Two Thousand Guineas, Kingcraft is steady at 5 to 2, offered; Astolfo at 7 to 1; Stanley, 10 to 1; and Claudius, after his running in the City and Suburban, at 20 to 1. Camel and Normanby are at 12 to 1 each, and their stable companion, King o' Scots, at 20 to 1. For the Derby, Kingcraft has been backed for a heavy amount at 8½ to 1, but 8 to 1 is always offered in thousands. Camel is backed at 10 to 1; Sunlight at 100 to 6; and Macgregor, at 20 to 1. Stanley is in force at 100 to 6, and Claudius is backed at 1,000 to 30. By cable telegram we learn that Sunshine is now at 7 to 1.

BASE BALL.

OPENING GAME OF THE UNIONS OF MORRISANIA.

The old ball-field of the Union Club of Morrisania, at Melrose, was on Wednesday, April 13th, the scene of the opening game of the Unions for the season of 1870, and as the weather was favorable there was not only a numerous attendance of spectators, but also a number of very good players present. Shortly after three o'clock sides were selected, and a game was commenced, nine of the Union Club playing against a field party of twelve, in which were some strong players. For an opening game it did well enough to choose this number for the field side, but in all regular practice games the field party should never exceed nine. If odds are required, it would be better to give them an increase of outs than an extra number of players on the field. The game was played pretty well up to the close of the sixth innings, but then they went in for fun generally. We append the score up to the sixth innings, which really closed the game.

The Unions have put a new man in their nine from Brooklyn, viz., Bass, one of the best players of the Powhattan club nine of last season. He will make a good short stop, and, moreover, is a good change pitcher. He led the batting in the opening game, one ball he hit flying over the railroad at Concord. O. Brown—another Brooklyn player—is to play first base, and on the occasion of his debut in the Union Club he acquitted himself with credit, putting out nine players at first base. The second base was not as strongly defended as it doubtless will be when Higham gets into practice.

ATLANTIC vs. FIELD.

The second day's play of the Atlantic Club this season took place at the Capitoline grounds on Thursday, April 14th, and being favored with a very fine day the attendance was numerous. The game played, however, proved to be uninteresting, as neither the full nine of the club were out, nor was there a strong field side opposed to them. We thought that the Atlantics were going in for practice this season, not only to have every man out on practice days, but also select strong nines to play against them. From the appearance of things in this game, however, it looks as if these expectations are not to be realized. We give the score of the game played. Inasmuch as they had miserable pitching against them, any detailed comments on the play are unnecessary:—

BASE BALL IN BALTIMORE.

THE "MARYLAND" BASE BALL CLUB, ALIAS "BLUE STOCKING."

After a suspension of a month the new directors of the "Maryland" Club, of Baltimore, have made public their actions. They have fully organized a professional nine, and adopted a rule which requires members of the nine (including substitutes) to practice together every morning of the week (Sunday excepted), with three afternoons for regular play. Their grounds are undergoing extensive alterations and repairs; the ladies' stand has been enlarged and 2,000 additional seats added to the previous number. Their uniform will be white flannel shirts, pants and caps, with blue cording and blue stockings.

The following is the record of the nine:—

M. H. Hooper, right field, the old veteran of the club, will captain the nine. He is a Baltimorean, has been in the organization since 1858, and has played in nearly every position, leading the average of the players each year; a very swift runner, a sure, heavy batter, a long thrower and in position of right field is excelled by no player in this country. Age, 24 years; weight, 165 lbs.; 5 feet 6 inches high.

Robert Matthews—pitcher—although only nineteen years of age, has won for himself an enviable reputation as a pitcher. He is also a Baltimorean. Has relieved Elias Cope after the Marylands' tour east last season, his pitching proving more effective. He is a good runner and catcher, a sure batter, and delivers a very swift ball. His weight is 120 lbs.; and he is 5 feet 5 inches high.

William Lennon—catcher—is from Brooklyn, N. Y., where he has played with several prominent clubs for some years, the Stars, Excelsiors, and Mohawks among the number. In 1868, in company with Treacey, went to the Excelsiors of Chicago, playing catcher, and in 1869 joined the Maryland. He is an excellent catcher, a very stiff batter, and a beautiful line thrower. His age, 21 years; weight 145 lbs.; 5 feet 7 inches high.

Thomas Forker—first baseman—is also a native of Brooklyn, N. Y. He commenced his ball career in 1863, in Mohawk, Jr., of his native city. In 1864, '65 and '66, he was in the Franklin, Jr., as first baseman; in 1867, in the Excelsiors and Mohawks, all Brooklyn clubs, in same position. In 1868 and '69 he played first base for the Nationals of Washington, D. C. He is one of the best and surest basemen in the country; in catching and picking up of ground balls he has no superior; an excellent batter, and fine line thrower. His age is 22 years; weight, 160 lbs.; 5 feet 10 inches high.

Charles S. Bearman—second baseman, and change pitcher—commenced ball-playing in 1866, as pitcher for the Monumentals of Hoboken, N. J., his native place; thence to the New York Mutuals, and in 1868 to the famous Haymakers of Lansingburgh, N. Y., where he played second base and change pitcher. He pitches a slow drop ball, he is good thrower, sure catch, and an extremely heavy batter. His age is 22 years; weight, 180 lbs; 6 feet high.

Wally Goldsmith—short stop—is a Baltimorean; he commenced ball-playing in 1863, as catcher of the Monumentals of that city; from 1864 to 1868 played with the Enterprise of same place, as a professional player, as both catcher and second base; in 1869 he joined the Maryland, and played second base most successfully that season; he is very quick and active, one of the finest swift line throwers they have, a sure safe batter and good runner. Age, 21 years; weight, 142 lbs.; 5 feet 10 inches high.

Thomas Carey—third baseman—is from Brooklyn, N. Y.; commenced playing with the Amity, Jr., of that city in 1866, as catcher; 1867, left field and second base in same club; 1869, Eagles of San Francisco, Cal., as centre fielder. Although not known in the base ball community, he is a magnificent player, a beautiful line thrower, a very heavy batter and sure catch. Age, 21 years; weight, 145 lbs.; 5 feet 8 inches high.

J. Tolly Worthington—left field—is a Baltimorean; has always been in the Maryland, with the exception of one season he played in the United States nine in Paris, in 1866, and created quite a furore; he is a splendid out-fielder, a strong heavy batter, and covers as much ground as any player now in the position, and a sure catch. Age, 22 years; weight, 165 lbs.; 6 feet high.

Robert Armstrong—centre field—is a native of Baltimore; has always played with the Maryland, the field being his position; he has made the longest hit on record on the Maryland ground; is a sure catch, a good mower, and an extraordinarily heavy batter. Age, 20 yars; weight, 160 lbs.; 6 feet 2 inches high.

BASE BALL AND OTHER SPORTS IN NEW MEXICO.—Our National Game is making its way to all parts of our continent. The following letter from Sans Fe may not be without interest to lovers of that and other games hereaway:—

DEAR CLIPPER.—The "City of the Holy Fath" is not so destitute of those things so pleasant to the present generation of Young Americans as many might think who mighty save some magnificent place of amusement to resort to. First of all (to your correspondent at least) we have a good base ball club, hang in its composition some known to a few of your readers; long none pretending to enter near what are known as "revolving" professionals. We are merely admirers of that noblest of games, ad try to do our little best to keep up an organization here, hundreds of miles away from any others. Of course, we are the champions of New Mexico, Arizona, Mexico, &c. It is amusing to scand hear the Mexicans and Indians during our practice games. Among our members are Jim McKenzie, of Peoria, Charlie Martin, Jerry Stout, P. E. Brier, of Washington, and many others. Playing all 9,000 feet above the sea in New Mexico in August is about as much like playing ball in Washington during the same month as playing whist in an ice house is different from playing in a hot house. The only trouble here being some difficulty in respiration. I begin to see Indian spring lessons in the manly art; this is somethin many of the boys here have wanted to see done according to the rles. . . Numbers of the young gents will soon start for the mountains, when three or four trout will have to suffer, not to mention bars, turkeys, deer, &c., and until the majority of the lads return from their summer's work in the mountains (and I hope all will ring their hair back with them), we cannot challenge the Red Stock &c. In the meantime we hope to soon present nine Indians before your eastern players that will prove to be no slouches. Hoping to e able to send you some accounts of our summer's trip and sport.

I am yours truly. "ANIGO."

MUTUALS OF JAMESVILLE.—The annual election of officers of this Wisconsin club took place on the 1st inst. The following gentlemen were elected for the ensuing year: President, J. W. St. John; Vice President, E. M. Smith; Financial Secretary, Wm. T. Ebbet; Corresponding Secretary, F. L. Smith; Treasurer, Orin Sutherland. The nine will be as follows:—Leneghen, c. f. Smith, p.; Heller, s. s.; Conant, 1st b.; F. Smith, 2d; B. Smith, 3d. b.; O. Sutherland, captain and l. f.; H. Obets, c. f.; M. Sutherland, r. f. The club are now the champions of the state, and will endeavor to maintain the title throughout the coming season. Any club wishing to play them can do so by addressing F. L. Smith, Corresponding Secretary M. B. B. C.

THE GAME IN PITTSFIELD, MA.—Our correspondent, writing from Pittsfield, says:—"On Tuesday evening, April 5th, the old Elm B. B. C. held the sixth annual meeting, which was largely attended, and great interest manifested in the proceedings. The following officers were elected:—W. R. Plunket, President; John J. Holland, Vice President; John Allen Root, Secretary; Frank H. Pitt, Treasurer. Directors and Match Committee, W. Grupien, A. N. Chapin, W. J. Coogan and S. . Shepardson. The club have hired a ground on corner of first and Lincoln streets, which they will enclose, and ha the finest base ball park in western Massachusetts. The will be happy to see any club there this season."

THE GRAND BASE BALL TOURNAMENT.—The great events of the season of 1870 will be the base ball tournaments which are to take place in Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Cincinnati in August and September. The series of games to be played will be the first of a regular series of tournaments which are to take place in future every season. The arrangements for the tournaments for this year will be made at a meeting of the delegates of the principal professional clubs of the country, which is to be held in this city during the visit of the Cincinnati Club in June next. In arranging the details for the meeting in question it would be well to leave the discussion of the several important questions which are likely to be acted upon at the meeting to as few delegates as possible. Certainly not more than two should be allowed to represent one club. Say for instance:—Tassie from the Atlantics; Wildey from the Mutuals; Voorhis from the Eckfords; Schofield from the Haymakers; Hayhurst from the Athletics; Joyce from the Cincinnatis, &c. Such men as these would soon arrange matters satisfactorily for the interests of the game, as well as for the pecuniary advantages of their respective clubs; and no doubt an equitable arrangement of the question of the championship title would be made, as well as a series of stringent rules governing the employment of professionals adopted, and a severe penalty inflicted on the odious custom of revolving. Let the subject begin to be discussed in club rooms, and some satisfactory conclusions arrived at in regard to what rules and regulations the meeting in question should take action upon.

Songs for the People.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

CHIMING BELLS.

TO CHARLES A. PRATT, OF THE "LINGARD TROUPE."

Floating o'er the little valley,
In the changeful air it swells,
While the sunbeams slowly fading,
Comes the sound of chiming bells;
Mem'ries in my heart are stealing,
Thoughts of other happy times,
Dreams of loved ones who have wandered
Far away from those sweet chimes.
Chorus—Oh! Chiming Bells, your music tells
The sweetest tales to me,
So ring your chimes in happy rhymes,
O'er valley, mead and lea.

Many years I've passed in roaming
Over on a foreign shore,
Yet to-night the bells seem chiming
Sweet as e'er in days before.
Visions through my brain are flitting;
We string round me dreamful spells,
As I sit and ever listen
To the chiming of the bells.
Chorus—Oh! Chiming Bells, etc.

Far above the little valley
Brightest stars in beauty gleam,
Ceased the sound of silv'ry chiming,
Faded like a passing dream;
Living arms around me pressing,
Love's contentment with me dwells;
Oh! that we might ever linger
'Neath the sound of chiming bells.
Chorus—Oh! Chiming Bells, etc.

ARTHUR W. PEARCE.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, April 18th, '70.

EASTER MONDAY! All hail the day we celebrate, the occasion which opened to the world a new existence, and brought order out of chaos, and so forth; but our pious colaborers in the vineyards dissected the entire subject yesterday, and went over the sacred ground from Alpha to Omega, leaving us but little to wish for in that connection. Our earliest recollections of Easter are associated with eggs, and some of them were very bad eggs; how well do we recall the happy recurrence of each succeeding Easter, when we used to go some other feller's "pint and but agin our pint," or "swap and do it," or "go yer even." Ah, those were eggciting times; with what care did we pick out the hardest eggs from the basket, testing the strength of them all by cracking away at each other without regard to the wanton destruction of public property. And how mad we used to get when, in the strong confidence of our champion egg, some unscrupulous candidate for the gallows would take our favorite with his egg, which afterwards proved to be a stone, we "picking agin him unsight unseen." And then with what delight did we gaze on those beautiful dyed eggs which our always kind and thoughtful mother would prepare for us as an Easter Monday surprise, for she invariably vetoed Babbadeg egg picking. Somehow we miss those good old days; it seems to us, now, that the generation of boys has died out; we see little of them—we see no more dyed eggs, no more picking; no more rolling down Easter hills; are there any boys and girls left? And, supposing there may be a few more left of the old sort, do they ever play "tag," "hide and whoop," "I spy," or any of those outdoor recreations which gave such zest to childhood when we were a boy? Perhaps it is our own fault that we do not hear in much of the midnight and early hours; they may have grown out of date, or become unsuited to the fast idea of the present age—boys and girls may play as usual, may pick eggs as usual, and do just the same as the boys and girls of the former period did. It is just possible that we are to blame in the matter, that we have grown away from the sports of the little ones, given up thoughts of them in our great greed of gain, of amassing money in the whirl of business cares, and that boys might we all feel, how much pleasanter would life seem to us, were we to mix and mingle a little more with boys and girls and their innocent pastimes.....We are now entering upon a season of mirth and festivity; the gloom of the past has been dispelled by the brightness and brilliancy of the new life, when the—maybe we better not get too deep in this sort of thing, but confine ourselves to our legitimate business. "Our Jim" was a dinning and greasing his poetry machine a day or two since, when he discovered a bit of paper scrouged up in one corner, which Jim had evidently ground out when laboring under spiritual influence, and which should have been brought to public notice when Arthur was here some time back, but, as the proverb says, "better late than never," so we will let Jim ventilate it now.

EPIGRAM ON ARTH.

The great Prince Arthur (Wales's brother)—
"Stop," we said, "ere you read more,
And please to tell us what the dickens
Arthur whales his brother for."

.....Mrs. Calhoun, who has become famous as a ready letter writer, vide her compositions as read before the jury on the late trial, ought to be secured as a dramatic critic for the unreliable ballies. She calls Mr. Booth the "divine young man," which is all well enough, but her sweeping denunciation of "a party by the name of Johnson," who performed at the Winter Garden when an effort was being made to put Abbie McFarland in her place, was rather cruel and unkind. Her estimation of managerial worth is not very exalted, for she claims to have measured Mr. Stuart, ex-manager, by his stomach, and so she caught him when he was hungry, and he was laid up to do, and gained her point by giving him a comfortable lunch. Abbie McFarland (who afterwards went on the stage as Miss Cushing) owes much to Mrs. Calhoun and that hasty plate of hash. As an advocate of "Woman's Rights," Mrs. Calhoun writes a strong hand, but we very much fear that she has put her foot in it this time.....And speaking of woman's rights, we perceive that a Miss Garrett, a lady physician, was lately appointed a member of the medical staff of the East London Hospital. We presume that Miss Garrett will attend to the room-attic patients. This calls to mind an "interview" we had with the evergreen Mrs. Partington the other day. She asked us if it was true that the fifteenth commandment allowed negro sufferings. On being answered in the affirmative, the old lady expressed her surprise, and said that this was certainly an age of reprogression, and that we must bear it in calm designation. "And how about the Rheumatic Railway?" she asked. "Well," said we, "it is a great bore." We had fondly hoped that she hadn't heard this gloomy joke before, but we were mistaken, for she whispered something to the effect that the age of that joke is entitled it to some disrespect. Finally, she said that she must return to the maternal mansion, as she had promised Ike to be back soon, and she didn't wish to lose her reputation for veracity. She then waddled away, after urging us to visit her home, and partake of its inhospitalities.....As Edwin Booth has gone from our gaze until the melancholy Dane's return, the saddest of the year, we shall now favor you with a few tender lines in honor of that "divine young man's" taking off.

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

Of Edwin Booth 'twas lately said, by one of genius bright,
That unto his profession he is a shining light;
We may admit the point without a great degree of bother,
For Edwin is a star himself and oil-paring of another,
And so this dramatic luminary sheds his light around,

.....A comic shining light, a youth of seventeen, is soon to shed his rays in the theatrical firmament of London; his name it is Hood, and he is said to be a very likely Hood; in which case there is every likelihood that this lively Hood will have no great difficulty in earning a livelihood upon the stage. We shall welcome him to the dramatic brotherhood.....Our streets have been made lively of late with the presence of circus parades, and circus people getting ready for the spring and summer (sault) season; and everybody seems to have had their heads turned with the flip flaps and hand springs of the artists. Just as Lent went out with Easter Sunday, so Lent went out of his circus in 14th street. This morning, while passing the old spot, made sacred by its Lenten term, and the almost miracles performed therein, we saw two boys standing in front of the place, cogitating, probably, upon the departure of the show. Presently an aged man came up. "Boys," said he, in a weak voice, for he was feeble and trembling, "where's Fifteenth street?" "Why, mister," said one of the urchins, "just you go along this here way to you come to the next street, then turn up." "Turn up! you young scamps, do you take me for a circus tumbler?" The boys came to the conclusion that they had turned up an "old frand."..... This slang expression reminds us of one that is equally expressive: "Good enough." How often are we tempted, on observing some kind, good or noble action, to cry out with all our strength, "good enough." And many a kindred action occurs daily and hourly which man sees not, but which, we imagine, is inscribed in letters of gold, in a higher world, "good enough." Acting under this idea, we sat down to indite a few lines on it, to wit:—

"GOOD ENOUGH."

See that man, as he passes along,
Step out from the hurrying throng—
Charity on his countenance stands—
He alleth with coin the blind man's hands—
"Good enough."

Just then we were called out to "see a man" who owed us a little bill. (How ready and willing we all are, and what alacrity and pleasure we exhibit, to "see a man" who owes us anything; but how we make excuses and create delays, and look sulky and grave, when a man calls to collect a little indebtedness from us. Oh, deceit, how——the idea has escaped us in the happiness we experience in securing that little bill.) In going out, we left the paper containing the above lines on our table. On returning, we noticed that another verse had been added. It needed but a single glance to see that it was Jim's handiwork; the dirty finger marks, the awkward writing and spelling betrayed him. The boy means well enough, but we must be excused if we remark that we hardly think he has caught our exact idea of the sentiment implied in our subject. Hear him:—

So those dorg, as he runs about
Bite them small dorg in the snout,
But the big dorg suns gits pade, and more,
Coss the fust boy givs him a keek in the jore.
"Good ensf."

.....This *dogg*rel reminds us of a dog in Minnesota that had been taught to sing; if true, it's a very singular thing; it certainly must be very a*mus*-ing to hear him exalt his voice. His owner should teach him to sing by note, which would make him still more notable, in which event he might secure an engagement to appear in Italian opera at the Academy of Music, and sing a barker role.

City Summary.

BUSINESS was dull at nearly all places of amusement during the past (holy) week; but now that the penitential term is over better things are looked for, and many of our managers have strenghtened their bills, while some give entirely fresh entertainments, as may be seen by a glance at our advertising columns.

"MEN AND ACRES" is such an excellent play that the management at Wallack's will retain it until further notice, notwithstanding it has not attracted very largely, owing, no doubt, to the effect of Lent. With the advent of the festive season our pious theatre-goers will once more get out of their sackcloth and ashes, and make merry again.

LENT'S NEW YORK CIRCUS brought its city season to a close on the 16th, and at once start out on a tenting expedition. The season has not been a successful one altogether. In the earlier part of it the attendance was very good, but it soon after fell off, and so continued till the end.

THE RISLEY COMBINATION, which has been playing during the past two weeks at Tammany, severed its connection with that place on the 16th, and will open at the Hippotheatron, Fourteenth street, this evening, 18th, inst. This combination was engaged while Mr. Palmer was in London, for the "New York Amusement Company," to appear at Tammany. As the "Amusement Company" was but short lived—if it ever had an existence—the Risley Troupe met with considerable difficulty during their appearances at Tammany, no effort being made by the management to place them properly before the public, or to enable them to exhibit in their right form; it does not appear that the performers understood that they were to exhibit where drinking and smoking were permitted, and they protested against it, but they were overruled, and they made the best of it. They will now have an opportunity to perform before ladies and families, and without those disagreeable adjuncts, smoking and drinking. The greatest of all jugglers, Agoust, will give exhibitions of his marvelous control over flying bottles, plates, eggs, etc., and the pretty Azella will make her astonishing swing from trapeze to trapeze, and turn somersaults while in the air. Sidney Franks, the comic singer, who, despite the unmanly opposition he has met with in certain quarters, worked his way into favor the past week, and received well merited encores, will here have a better chance to show his talents than was afforded him at the other house. And in addition to these there are the Spanish dancers, the male and female vocalists, the performing dogs and monkeys, etc. The prices of admission are 50 and 75 cents. Let a hearty welcome be accorded the strangers.

LESTER WALLACK made his first appearance since his return from his eastern trip, at a matinee at his own theatre, on the 16th inst. The play was "Ours."

"FROU-FROU," with the characters attired in their new spring clothes, and the parlors decorated with some new furniture and things, will start fresh this evening, and give the "girls of the period" new opportunities to weep over the sad fate of "Frou-Frou," and bemoan the unhappy condition of her thoughtless husband.

"THEY SAY" that, sooner or later—that's rather indefinite, isn't it?—Lydia Thompson is to appear before us in a legitimate drama, written for her by the elder Dumas, in which she will probably appear in long clothes. To see Lydia in such a garb will be like seeing a fish out of its natural element, and we'll wager a new half dollar that very few church goers will patronize her if she thus discards her undress uniform.

THE TEMPTATIONS to visit the Grand Opera House are now greater than ever, for, to give eclat to the Easter holidays, a new ballet will be introduced in the "Twelve Temptations" to-night, which will show some of the best dancing we have had in the city for a long time. The dancing element at this house is now one of the most attractive features of the great spectacle, which, taken as an entirety, is among the successes of this remarkable theatrical era. Many managers think of the full strength of their companies, but at the Grand Opera House you are permitted to see it, the stage at one time being almost filled with the various members in their respective roles.

THE TAMMANY, which, under its new management, has been made a drinking saloon, does not seem to meet with favor in that form. This week a number of negro acts, etc., will be given by performers who have been frequently seen at Tony Pastor's and Butler's Theatre Comique.

KELLY AND LEON'S MINSTRELS inaugurate Easter Week with something entirely new, viz.: a burlesque on "Frou-Frou." That it will be presented in good shape cannot be doubted, as this troupe have secured a high reputation for producing burlesque opera in a decidedly artistic and liberal manner, both as regards scenery and costumes. The solos, duets and choruses will be given by the full company, which embraces most excellent musical talent. You that have seen Agnes Ethel's "Frou-Frou" should not miss seeing Leon's.

"PIPPIN," at Niblo's, gives promise of proving a golden Pippin to its managers, the attendance being quite large even during the Holy Week. That "a little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men" is a true bill, for we noticed many of our prominent citizens present during the past week, and they all seemed to be highly delighted with something, but whether with the visible charms of the "ladyes faire" or the nursery rhymes of the other fellers we shall not undertake to decide, probably the former.

"LAY ON MACDUFF" is the battle cry of the invincible G. L. Fox at the Olympic, where the tragi-comic pantommist opens in his new role of Macbeth this evening, 18th, the melancholy and subdued Hamlet having been shelved on the 16th inst. The parts of Hamlet and Macbeth are so widely different that we are not positive that the wily Humpty Dumpty will be able to take in the Thane of Chowder at one fell swoop, yet we have such confidence in the strategic abilities of Mr. Fox that we shall not be greatly disappointed if George does not make hash out of Mister McDuffy in short order. The tragedy is cast to the combined abilities of the heavy villains and other tragic characters connected with this establishment.

AN ORIGINAL BURLESQUE, on local subjects, is in preparation at Wood's Museum; it is to be replete with fresh jokes, we are given to understand. This fact alone should ensure its success.

"SHOO FLY" will have died 100 times, at Bryant's, this evening; patrons can get "out on the fly" before ten o'clock. "Hamlet" still holds the black boards at this house, all other melancholy chaps having been driven from the field. Go hear Dan's soliloquy on a skull, and Dave Read about "Shoo Fly."

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID will lecture at Steinway Hall this evening, "by request." His main read-ing will take in Byron, and probably his lordship's female reconstruction-ist will come in for an overhauling.

CARLOTTA PATTI, who, we think, is being patronized to some extent for the other Patti by people who don't know any better, is to appear in opera, the "Magic Flute," at the Academy, on the 19th, 22d and 23d inst. She will be assisted by Herr Formes, Graf (that's the Herr "Our Jim" would spell it, too) Herrmanns, Herr Habiemann, and various other mans, and by Madame Dzuiba and Miss Pauline Canissa. Two dollars for reserved seat.

ROLLIN HOWARD, burlesque prima donna and Shoo Flyist, and Master Fink, boy soprano, are the latest additions to the San Francisco Minstrels, who now give the creme de la creme of minstrelsy and the milk de la milk of burlesquetty. This band is strong both in numbers and talent, and give a very entertaining entertainment. The names of the members of the Friscos:—William Birch, Charles Backus, William Bernard, Esquires, managers and entrepreneurs as well as jokists, singers and so forthers; John Mulligan, eccentric comedian and plantation colored person; Robert Newcomb, song and dancist; Norman, Dwyer, Templeton, Oberist and Shattuck, singists and instrumentalists; Queen and West, dancers, etc., and C. Lavalle to direct the orchestra.

MRS. SMILEY BROWN, who so was so severely injured a short time ago by taking fire while performing at Springfield, Mass., is to have a complimentary benefit on Wednesday afternoon, April 20th, at Wallack's Theatre. The "Debutante," "Rough Diamond" and "A Gentleman from Ireland" will be presented, introducing a gentleman from England in the person of John S. Clarke, and another gentleman from Ireland in the person of John Brougham, as well as Mrs. Sedley Brown, Mr. Charles Peakleigh, Edward Falconer, Miss Effie Germon, Mrs. W. Winster, and others in the various pieces, all of which shows that the profession mean to do it up Brown.

"FERNANDE," Sardou's new comedy, will probably succeed "Frou-Frou" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

MANAGER FERLIGH promises to give his patrons plenty of variety at the Bowery Theatre this week, embracing dancing, gymnastics, singing, and entire plays. The new drama, "New York—1840-1870," is among the novelties. It will truly be a festival week at the Old Bowery.

CHARLES FECHTER, the dramatic puzzle, is to open a brief season at the French Theatre on Monday evening next, 25th ult., in "Lady of Lyons," supported by Miss Leclercq in her great character of Pauline.

GERTRUDE DAWES, who was some years ago a great favorite at the Old Bowery Theatre, is announced for a benefit at that house on Friday evening, 22d inst.

SAMUEL COLVILLE sailed on the 16th for Europe in the Ville de Paris, to look up talent for the home market.

HENRI KOWALSKI, a pianist of note, is to give a concert in this city on the 20th inst., assisted by Mme. De Lussan, Miss Clara Perl, and others.

OLE BULL had a very good attendance at his concert at Association Hall on Saturday afternoon. He expects to take his farewell shortly.

MISS J. SEPHINE SCHIMPF, a vocalist of considerable reputation in Philadelphia, is to illustrate the music of the Irish bard on the occasion of a lecture to be given by Mr. C. W. Brookes, of the Philadelphia Bar, on the 19th inst.

THE NEW SPANISH BALLET TROUPE for the Grand Opera House are now on their way to this country, and may be looked for in a few days.

MANAGERS are making arrangements for the summer season. J. K. Emmett, our German Cousin, and John Brougham, our Irish relation, it is said, will divide the heated term at Wallack's.

MR. J. S. CLARKE, comedian, commences an engagement at Edwin Booth's Theatre this evening, April 18th, on which occasion he will appear in two of his leading personations, viz.:—Major Wellington De Boots and Toodles.

EDWIN BOOTH terminated his performances at his own theatre, until next fall, on the 16th. The characters presented by this American actor this past winter have been the leading features of the metropolitan performances of the season. Indeed, the plays presented at his establishment since its opening have been marked with such excellence of scenic accessories and stage appointments, to say nothing of the admirable performances of the artists of the company, as to make them events of historical interest in the annals of the drama; especially was this the case in regard to the production of "Hamlet" and the other Shakespearean plays performed. Mr. Booth opened his theatre with "Romeo and Juliet," and followed it up with "Othello." Then we had an interregnum of the more modern style of plays, that fine American comedian, Mr. Joseph Jefferson, playing a brilliant engagement in "Rip Van Winkle." This was followed by Miss Bateman in "Mary Warner," and Hackett as Falstaff, both noted American artists. Then came Shakespeare again, "Hamlet" being produced in a style of dramatic excellence never before equaled in this country or in Europe. After a long run we had Massinger's play of "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," with Mr. Booth as Sir Giles Overreach, followed by "Macbeth" and closing with the "Lady of Lyons," Mrs. Waller filling up some off nights with her representation of Meg Merrilies.

SAM T. SIMONS has entered into partnership with Harry Cunningham, and will assume the management of the Eureka Dramatic Agency, 636 Broadway. A good singing chambermaid is wanted by them. See advertisement.

A SO-CALLED BURLESQUE of the "Bohemian Girl" was presented at Wood's Museum the past week by the English blondes under Felix Roger's command, at the evening performances, and the result was that instead of the good houses which had been attracted by the "White Cat" burlesque, given by the American brunettes the week previous, the attendance during the week at night was comparatively slim, while at the afternoon performances the Rand Sisters, with their "White Cat," drew good houses. The "Bohemian Girl" burlesque is one of the poorest efforts in that line of writing we have seen attempted for some time. "Sappho" was bad enough, but this last piece is worse. Mesdayer's Count was the only redeeming feature, although Miss Pitt as the Queen was not bad. Jenny Williamore's Arline was not good.

THE "HIPPODROMB FARCIEN," by which title the Great European Circus inaugurated the season of 1870, at the Empire Skating Rink, Third avenue and 63d street, on the 11th inst., proved tolerably successful, the afternoon and evening performances providing a source of much enjoyment to good-sized audiences. The interior of the establishment had undergone considerable alteration in order to be adapted to the new style of entertainment, a large part of it having been floored over, the chandeliers lowered sufficiently to give additional light, and a ring, forty-five feet in diameter, having been erected in the centre. Along the promenade were ranged the handsome chariots, carriages, wagons, etc., of the concern, while within the enclosure were likewise quartered all the stock, together with the den of wild animals—all open to the inspection of the audience. In the rear a canvas was erected and occupied as a dressing room. The company is a very strong one, embracing some of the finest artists in the profession, and the entertainment was, in all respects, of a first-class character, the various acts drawing forth spontaneous and hearty applause—especially the somersault equestrianship of Frank Pastor, and the bare-back riding of the Italian star, Senor Sebastian, accompanied by his son Romeo, as graceful and daring as his father. The other leading members of the troupe, consisting of Miss Jennette Watson and M'lle Zerlina Loretta, equestriennes; La Jeune Burt, bareback rider; Chas. Conrad and sons, Denzer family, acrobats; Chas. Rivers, four horse rider; Sam Long and Wm. Aymar, clowns, were all well received, and performed their several specialties in such manner as became old and experienced arenic performers. As jokists, Long and Aymar are in the front rank, and their comicalities tickled the risibilities of old as well as young immoderately. A grand street pageant, with the live lion "free as the air," took place on two days during the week, and attracted much attention along the streets through which it passed by the fine display. Mr. Pierce, the lion tamer, imperilled life and limb at each performance by fraternizing with these beasts of the forest in their den, but on Thursday, 14th inst., one of the quadrupeds did not receive his attentions favorably and made an attempt to give him his quietus, fortunately without success. He suddenly sprang upon Mr. Pierce and struck him with his paw upon the right shoulder, lacerating the flesh somewhat, but fortunately ere he could inflict further injury the lion was rendered insensible by a blow on the head from iron bars, the latter through the sides of the cage by assistants, and the tamer enabled to escape from his dangerous situation. The injuries sustained by Mr. P. were but trifling, and did not prevent his re-appearing during the remainder of the week. The season at the rink terminated on the 16th, and to-night and to-morrow, 18th and 19th, they appear in Williamsburg, and on the 20th show at Hoboken, N. J.

HARRY MONTAGUE, well known as agent and representative of various troupes and performers in Europe, arrived here on the 14th inst., from England. He accompanies to this country Sadi D'Jalma, a contortionist, whose performances are said to be wonderful.

THE TIVOLI THEATRE, on Canal, an attractive bill is offered for the current week, consisting of the roaring farce of "Toodles," with J. C. Stewart as Mr. Toodles and Jenny Kimball as Mrs. Toodles, both of them excellent character actors. Then comes "The Sports of Spain," by a grand ballet, including M'lle. Venturoli, premiere danseuse; M'lles. Lasuardi, Caroline, La Point, the Misses Young, Ida La Rivers, Carrie Harris, Hattie Engel, Emma Reeves, Blanche Yelverton, Eugene Hoffman, Emma Devry, Lizzie Dale, Anna Elmore, and the Scholler Sisters. Miss Annie Hindle makes her first appearance on the 18th inst., in her attractive protean specialties, and George H. Coes, Lew Simmons, and T. Sully give faithful portraits of negro specialties. With such a programme, under Mons. La Thorne's stage management, an empty house is not to be thought of, and Manager Butler's exchequer should be filled to overflowing. Messrs. Slocum, Collins, Stewart, Frazer, Barney, Kelly, Anderson, and Master Barney also add to the attractions in "Peter Pipes, The Man About Town."

L. W. SEAVEY, scenic artist, is painting a new drop curtain for Odd Fellows' and Masonic Hall, St. Joseph, Mo. The subject is Isola Bella, one of the most charming of Italy's lake scenes.

AT TONY PASTOR'S OPERA HOUSE the week was announced to commence on the 18th with a grand Easter holiday matinee, the leading piece in the afternoon being "The Dutchman in Europe," undoubtedly a most laughable farce; and in the evening with a burlesque of "Macbeth," with Tony himself as Macbeth. Messrs. Legget, Allen, Frank Kerns and Neise Seymour, are also to amuse the patrons of this Bowery establishment in their several specialties, together with the ballet and other performers in their specialties.

MR. HERTER, the Talking Hand, under engagement to Mr. Risley for one year, is said to have made an agreement with another party to appear in Boston this week, although his name is in the bills to appear at the New York Hippotheatron. We trust that there is some mistake in this.

IONE BURKE AND JAMES CARDEN left for San Francisco, Cal., for Maguire's, on the 12th inst.

A NUMBER of the personal friends of Mr. W. H. Bowditch, agent for Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence for ten years past, have determined to give him a complimentary benefit at one of the theatres in this city, after his illness of five months duration, from which he is now, we are pleased to know, rapidly recovering. The date has not yet been fixed, but we doubt not the profession will cheerfully assist with their talent, and the public with their purses, to render it a success in every respect.

KELLY AND LEON publish a card among our theatrical advertisements, cautioning the public against a troupe traveling through the Eastern States under the style and title of "Kelly, Leon & Wilson's Minstrels," with whom the managers of the cosy hall at 720 Broadway have no connection.

FANNY BROWN, Dick Rivers, Barry, and others connected with Chiarini's Circus in South America, arrived here about a week ago.

Dramatic.

OF PHILADELPHIA THEATRICALS, our correspondent, "John Duck," remarks as follows, of date April 17th:—"There is not much theatrical news to report. Business, as a general thing, is good. 'Frou-Frou,' at the Arch, was a failure, so far as drawing houses is concerned, for the play was splendidly brought out and admirably acted. This week is comedy week. J. S. Duffield announces his farewell benefit on the 25th, giving 'Ten Nights in a Bar-room,' 'Old Heads and Young Hearts,' 'Old Sailors Yo Ho Gold,' 'Faust,' and the farce of the 'Rope Ladder.'.....The benefits at the Walnut Street Theatre were all well attended, with the exception of one or two. 'The Emerald Ring' will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams on the 18th.....The greatest success of the season, Mrs. J. A. Oates' 'Field of the Cloth of Gold' party, opened at the Chestnut on the 11th, to a house completely packed, and, up to the 16th, the crowds seemed on the increase. The rarest portion of the programme is unusually entertaining, to say nothing of the burlesque, which, in itself, is agreeably funny. The cast embraces a host of excellent performers, some old favorites, and others destined to become such. Mrs. J. A. Oates comes back to us with her pretty, winning ways, petite figure and sweet voice, and, with Hernandez, is the greatest card at present in the city. The lovely May Howard is an old favorite in Philadelphia, and appears in the burlesque to the best possible advantage, in the character of Constance. Another favorite, Mrs. Pauline Hayden plays the Duke of Suffolk, Miss Jennie Gilmer, Le Sieur de Boissy, and Miss Hattie O'Neil, Annie Boleyn. Messrs. Chatterson, Hayden, Lingard and Allen vied with each other in doing their best, and they all were successful. The features introduced in the tournament scene, though not so numerous as last season, were received with great applause. Hernandez' French dancing mania is very funny. The gymnastic feats the Victorelli brothers was excellent. Hernandez' Cowbellogians and "Japs," and Prof. M. O'Reardon's tumblerionicon are well known all over the country. The display of flags is grand. Next (this) week we are to have a new scene introduced, being a burlesque on the Boston Peace Jubilee, with artillery and infantry and one hundred musicians. Mrs. Oates appears as arbuckle, and Hernandez as Patrick Gilmore. A new piece is in preparation, called the 'Fair one With the Blonde Wig.' It will be produced under the management of Mr. Geo. H. Tyler, Miss Keene, it is rumored, having withdrawn. The business manager and treasurer, Mr. John T. Donnelly, has resigned, and his position is taken by Mr. Charles H. Day, a gentleman who long filled the position of agent to Miss Keene. Miss Emily Siddons Yates, who made her appearance here a short time ago as Hamlet, will shortly play Claude Melnotte, supported by Miss Beata Schaub as Pauline and Alex. Cowan as Col. Dumas.....At the American an abundance of Mr. Ed. Banker's laughable negro acts, with the grand ballets, comic songs and fancy dances for which this establishment is noted, was presented during the past week to a continuation of crowded houses. Mlle. La Rosa's 'Shoo Fly' medley remained on the bill as one of the attractions. Masters Mackin and Sullivan do an excellent song and dance called 'My Pretty Mignonette.' The four features of the entertainment for the week were Andy Hughes and his pupils, Ed. Banker's changes, Collins and Daisey's Punch and Judy, and the Carlo Brothers in their comic act with hats. Mr. Smith's two ballads were still a success. John Daisey's Irish comic songs and L. Collins' comic Dutch songs are well received. The 'Dutch Emigrant' has made a hit. Larry Tooley doing Herns immensely. John Forbes closed his engagement on the 16th. Andy Hughes and his two pupils open with O'Brien's circus at Frankford on the 18th. A new ballet will be given this week called 'The Faries of the Lake,' and the Carlo Brothers produce a new pantomime called 'Bobby Trot.' Sam Devere and Mlle. Marie Zoel, the little clog dancer, are to put in an appearance on the 18th. A change is to be made in the stage management of this theatre, Mr. B. A. Baker taking the place of J. R. Roberts. Until lately he was stage manager at the Chestnut Street Theatre."

GEORGIE DICKSON, a favorite actress with Canning's Stock Company, had a benefit at the Opera House, Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 11th inst., "Margot, the Poultry Dealer," and "Jennie Deans" being the bill.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE, Pittsburgh, Pa., Elise Holt, with Harry Wall as an aid de camp, appeared on the 12th inst. in the burlesque of "Lucretia Borgia," in which the lady was heartily applauded, as well as Georgie Dickson as Arsini. On the 13th and 14th, the same bill, with a farce added. On the 15th, "Ivanhoe," for Miss Holt's benefit. Chanfrau was to commence there on the 18th in "Sam." The receipts at this house in March were $14,474.56.

MR. J. S. CLARKE, comedian, commences an engagement at Edwin Booth's Theatre this evening, April 18th, on which occasion he will appear in two of his leading personations, viz.:—Major Wellington De Boots and Toodles.

EDWIN BOOTH terminated his performances at his own theatre, until next fall, on the 16th. The characters presented by this American actor this past winter have been the leading features of the metropolitan performances of the season. Indeed, the plays presented at his establishment since its opening have been marked with such excellence of scenic accessories and stage appointments, to say nothing of the admirable performances of the artists of the company, as to make them events of historical interest in the annals of the drama; especially was this the case in regard to the production of "Hamlet" and the other Shakespearean plays performed. Mr. Booth opened his theatre with "Romeo and Juliet," and followed it up with "Othello." Then we had an interregnum of the more modern style of plays, that fine American comedian, Mr. Joseph Jefferson, playing a brilliant engagement in "Rip Van Winkle." This was followed by Miss Bateman in "Mary Warner," and Hackett as Falstaff, both noted American artists. Then came Shakespeare again, "Hamlet" being produced in a style of dramatic excellence never before equaled in this country or in Europe. After a long run we had Massinger's play of "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," with Mr. Booth as Sir Giles Overreach, followed by "Macbeth" and closing with the "Lady of Lyons," Mrs. Waller filling up some off nights with her representation of Meg Merrilies.

SAM T. SIMONS has entered into partnership with Harry Cunningham, and will assume the management of the Eureka Dramatic Agency, 636 Broadway. A good singing chambermaid is wanted by them. See advertisement.

IN BOSTON, writes our correspondent, "Coriolanus," on the 16th, "The week has not been very exciting as regards theatrical affairs, as at two houses plays are running and at the third the bills have consisted mostly of repetitions. At the third the bills have consisted mostly of repetitions. The chief novelty, however, has been Mr. Fechter as Don Cæsar de Bazan, in the drama of that name, which was given for the first time in this city on Monday evening, 11th, at the Boston Theatre. A large audience was present, and Mr. Fechter was warmly received upon his first entrance. His impersonation of the lively, noble Don Cæsar pleased his audience immensely, and was, indeed, a very good performance to those who admire his style. He appeared to much better advantage than in any other of his parts I have seen him in the way of support, scenery, properties and other details. Notwithstanding the empty benches Miss Reignolds played with care and judgment. She left to-day for St. Louis, to appear to-morrow night at the Olympic, where she will no doubt meet with that success that she so truly merits. A. H. Davenport (Deily) has been confined to his room for over ten days from severe illness. On the 8th inst. 'London Assurance' was put on the stage in a highly creditable manner; Lady Gay was capitally personated by Miss Reignolds, Sir Harcourt Rattray found an able representative in Mr. E. Duncan; Grace was naturally acted by Miss Ella Wren. W. H. Lingard appears to-morrow (11th) night.....I send you a correct list of James Herne's company, which he has engaged to appear at Montreal May 30th, viz.:—Messrs. Charles Waverly, James Cardier, Pike, Pitt, Saphore, Sheldon; Misses Ella Wren, Monell, Hattie Whitney, Mrs. Bradshaw, Miss Bradshaw, and Mr. Robert Duncan."

D. H. HARKINS opens at Buffalo, N. Y., April 18th, for one week.

EDWIN FORREST, supported by Holland's Dramatic Troupe, opened at Peoria, Ill., the 7th, in "Richelieu." The season lasted four nights, during which "Jack Cade," "Othello" and "King Lear" were rendered to large audiences.

MCKEAN BUCHANAN, with a first class troupe, opens at Peoria, Ill., April 18th, in "Richard III," for a season of six nights.

THE WHITE INDIANAPOLIS DRAMATIC TROUPE were carefully prepared, and is really well sung. The solo parts are satisfactorily sung by competent voices and the choruses are given with precision. As an amateur performance it has been a success, but the limited attendance has not paid the artists for their labor. The Concordia Mænnerchor has promptly recognized the debt of gratitude to Mr. Groscarth, the leader of this society, by tendering him a complimentary benefit, which occurred on Wednesday evening last. It was a handsome tribute to his qualities as a gentleman and musician. Mr. Groscurth is fully deserving of this compliment for his success in bringing out the opera of the 'Magic Flute.' This was the last performance of this opera, and the society will at once enter upon the study of 'Tannhauser.'.....The Parepa Opera Troupe commences at this house on Monday evening, 18th, and, as they have added some new operas to their repertoire, they ought to have a successful season. They produce the 'Marriage of Figaro' on Monday, and 'Oberon' will be sung for the first time in this city on Tuesday evening."

Music for brass bands can be had of Dale & Pfeiffer, who advertise.

THE BENGER FAMILY, SWISS BELL RINGERS, were at Meridian, Miss., on the 7th and 8th, Macon, 9th, and Columbus, Miss., 11th, 12th and 13th. Their business is said to be very fine, as they are now traveling through a section never before visited by bell ringers. They were advertised for but two nights in Columbus, but as they turned away many people, they remained a third night and "skipped" West Point, Miss., where they were billed for the 18th. Maud Stanley was robbed at Meridian of a trunk containing $400 worth of wardrobe. Mr. Kendall, the manager, remained behind, and on the following day recovered all the property and secured the thief, who is in jail awaiting his trial in August next. The Bergers were billed for Aberdeen, Miss., for the 14th, 15th, 16th, and Jackson, Tenn., 18th, 19th and 20th.

THE RUSSIAN VOCALISTS will give a concert at Sink's Opera House, Rome, N. Y., on the 26th inst.

BRIGNOLI'S ITALIAN OPERA COMPANY open at the Philadelphia Academy of Music, for five nights and a matinee, on the 21st.

THE MENNERCHOR CLUB of Rochester, N. Y., produce the opera bouffe, Incognito, Grand Duke of Geroldstein," on April 19th, when they will be assisted by the Amateurs of Rochester, who will play the farce of "The Valet De Sham."

THE PAREPA-ROSA OPERA TROUPE perform for one week at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, commencing Monday, 25th.

SPAULDING'S BELL RINGERS are moving on the towns on the New York Central R. R. Last week they appeared in Albion, Medina, Lockport, Suspension Bridge and Niagara Falls. They are billed for the coming week at Batavia, Avon, Leroy, Geneseo, Mount Morris and Bath.

MISS ANNIE CORELLA is giving concerts through the West.

THEODORE THOMAS AND ANNA MEHLIG are announced to give two concerts at Providence, R. I., on the 20th inst., one in the afternoon and the other in the evening.

Variety Halls.

CHRISTIE MORRELL, Louise Irving and Mr. Donnelle are the latest cards at the Metropolitan Hall, Washington, D. C. Our correspondent says:—"Miss Morrell is young and rather good looking. She has many things to learn, however, before she can become a successful vocalist. In the first part (on the night she opened, 11th inst.), she sang 'Blue Eyed Jennie,' and was encored. In the olio she sang a budget of songs, but was not so heartily applauded. Louise Irving has a sweet, sympathetic voice, and is a capable vocalist. She sang 'Beautiful Bells' in the minstrel scene, the chorus was prettily rendered with an accompaniment on tiny silver bells. In the second part Miss Irving sang a song called 'Footprints on the Snow,' and as an encore she warbled the 'Mocking Bird,' assisted by Mr. Donnelle, who stood at one of the wings and imitated a mocking bird very cleverly. It was exceedingly well done, and was one of the best things on the programme. Mr. Donnelle appeared in a Yankee character and was favorably received. The other members of the company, James Porter, Harry Hart, Harry Leslie, Maggie Nichols, Nellie Edwards, Jennie DeMars, Minnie Grey, Maggie Weaner and Dotty Zanfreta appeared in new sketches, dances and amusing farces. Manager Henze has engaged a portion of the Marine Band to give balcony serenades each evening, previous to the commencement of the performance."

THE MUSIC HALL business of Memphis, Tenn., is thus adverted to by our correspondent, of date April 10th:—"At John W. Thompson's Parlor Music Hall business is good, and the performance pleasing, new faces constantly appearing. Greater attention to the details of the stage are perceptible since the management has come under J. W. Berkley (formerly of the American, Baltimore). The ever exciting 'Can-can' is running.....At Broom's Opera House business is better than of late; the company, so far as the ladies are concerned, are by far the handsomest and the best performers in the concert business in this burgh. Charles Carton, Charles Brown and little Josie put in an appearance to-morrow night (11th). These performers are just from the Pacific slope. The performances conclude with the irrepressible 'Can-can'.....Charley O. White, stage manager of Broom's, has left and has formed a company, chartered a steamboat, bought a round top canvas tent, and will start to-morrow (11th) for the White, Red and Mississippi River towns. The following are the names of the troupe:—The Clair Sisters, Billy Diamond, Sig. Capois, Maggie White, Billy De Vere, Sig. Frances, Ned Straight, Charley Boughten, Prof. Powder, D. Miller and Julius G. Robinson.....The Old Varieties Theatre has been doing the best business of all of the shows here since its re-opening by Jimmy Schools. Hen. Mason is stage manager. The olio and second part are presented, and the performances conclude with the ever gay 'Can-can.'"

AT THE VARIETIES THEATRE, St. Louis, on Tuesday evening, 6th inst., was given the initial performance of the spectacle, written by Robert Jones, entitled the "Green Huntsman." The house was packed from pit to dome, and a notice, "standing room only," tacked on the box office at 8 o'clock. A correspondent says:—"We had a glance at the generalities, and must confess our astonishment at the complete success and the princely extravagant in which the management effected their purpose. Everything is entirely new; the dresses the most lavish we have ever seen; the machinery is of the most committed and novel form. The transformation scene is one of most surpassing brilliancy, by the American artist, Thomas C. Norton, being one of his happiest efforts, the whole combining a mise en scene surpassing in splendor the famous 'Black Crook.' The dialogue is better than the generality of show pieces; the situations very fine. Harry Union, C. Chapman, Frank Frayne, John H. Jack, Barney McLaughlin, Sallie Mason, Emma Merrill and the entire Varieties company comprise the cast. The ballet is under the direction of M. Biandowski, comprising the premieres Leah, Elise, D'Acoste, Diana, and fifty coryphees. We predict a long run for the piece.

ARTISTS in all branches of the profession are wanted for a season of eight months by Harry Weston. Address as per advertisement.

DAVIS' THEATRE COMIQUE, East Saginaw, Mich., is still open, and reported as doing a good business. The principal features of the programme during the past week were the feats of Arizona and the Irish Can-can.

WILHELM OPERA HOUSE, Portsmouth, O., appears to be well suited to the wants of traveling companies. It is furnished with a stage and scenery, has a green and dressing rooms, and is lighted by gas. Seating capacity about eight hundred. For further particulars see advertisement.

A BANJO PLAYER advertises that he can be engaged to travel with a doctor the coming season.

MR. FLORANCE REES, actor and elocutionist, gave an entertainment at Topeka, Kansas, April 9th, under the auspices of the Good Templars. He left for Kansas City, Mo., April 12th.

SADI D'ALMA, a contortionist, who appears to have gained a reputation for his specialty in Europe and Asia, arrived in New York during the past week. Speculators can address his agent as per advertisement.

THE 15TH AMENDMENT, a new song, is published by Saul Sertrew.

THE TWO-HEADED GIRL was exhibited at Quincy, Ill., on the 11th and 12th inst.; thence to Springfield and St. Louis, where "it" lays up for a week, previous to starting for California.

AT THE FRONT STREET THEATRE COMIQUE, Baltimore. Sam Collyer and Sons and Barney Aaron closed the second and last week of their engagement on the 16th. Besides appearing in the triple clog, Collyer showed, in a gymnasium scene introduced in the drama of "Joe Kidd," in a grand assault at arms with Aaron. This attraction and the "Shoo Fly" ballet crowded the Front nightly. Gus Williams is considered popular, and in his character and sentimental vocalisms elicited repeated and enthusiastic recalls. His new ballads of "Broken Down" and "Do not Push a Man when He's Going Down Hill" are touchingly beautiful. Miss Hannah Birch is fascinating in her walk around "Medley," as well as Sallie Apt in her fancy dance. Miss Adah Richmond closed her fourth and last week on the 16th. On Monday, 18th, the following artists are announced to appear, viz., Mons. and Mlle. Leopold, gymnasts, and Ada Wray, vocalist. A new military ballet is underlined.

OUR CINCINNATI CORRESPONDENT writes on the 15th as follows:—"Charley Shay's Quinculpleral, at Pike's Music Hall, this week, has been the biggest thing in the variety line we have had. It has succeeded only tolerably, though advertised extensively. Two of the troupe, Frank Wilson and Zelia Renard, were at the Fourth Street Varieties last season. Besides these, the company consists of Lew Hallett, Charley Shay, Harry Causland, Frank Ashton (contortionist), William Ashton, little Willie Ashton, Dollie Sattiler, Ernestine Loyal and Edwin Turner. In addition to these, there are a couple of performing dogs. They give a very fair menage performance.....The Theatre Comique, on Sixth st., after a number of delays caused by the difficulty in securing a company, finally opened last night (Thursday) to a good house. The company is as follows: Charley Bastine and Johnny Connor; and Johnnie Reed, a very nice song and dance performer, is also there. The females embrace Lon Rainford, late of the Race Street Varieties; Minnie Warner, recently from New Orleans; Millie Basoure, vocalist, and Annie Florence, jiggist. The company is as yet imperfect, but will be increased as soon as practicable.....The Race Street Theatre continues to do well. There have been no new faces this week, but next week there will be several changes, Jim Maas and Gussie Crayton going to Pittsburgh, and Charley Benedict, now playing with the Allen and Fetzengill party, opening on Monday. The Freeman Sisters, from Pittsburgh, are also looked for next week. The old farce of the 'Happy Man' is being played here this week, under the name of the 'Happy Hindoo Princess,' with Johnny Fielding as Paddy Murphy.....At the Alhambra, Tom Adams revolved away without notice at the close of last week, and has been replaced by Henry Cavella, end man and song and dance performer. Minnie Warner was billed, but slipped off to the new Theatre Comique. The splendid new hall of Mr. Ryan is rapidly advancing towards completion, and he expects to be ready for work by Monday, 25th.....Mr. Broome, of the Memphis Varieties, has been negotiating, it is said, for a large building opposite the Alhambra, for variety hall purposes. It is not yet known whether he will take it.....The Brighton Varieties, which opened two weeks since, is under successful headway, with a company headed by Tim Woodruff and M. A. Grimn.....The hall of H. W. Collins, on Sixth street, known as the Academy of Music, is closed, probably permanently.....Dan Connor and his brother, M. Connor (Cincinnati), reached town yesterday, as did Charley Rivers. The two former are going circusing. Lew Brimmer, Johnnie Weaver and May Gifford are also here. They may open with the new Alhambra company."

GUS WILLIAMS, character vocalist, who opens at Tammany, N. Y., on the 18th inst., can be addressed by managers through his agent, whose address will be found in the advertisement columns.

AT WARD'S OPERA HOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., Mlle. Dulin put in an appearance on the 11th inst., and, as a danseuse, she excelled. Miss Lottie Mitchell made a first appearance on the 10th.

THE VARIETIES, Milwaukee, Wis., was opened on the 9th inst., by a company of moderate talent, we are informed, and business was, therefore, light.

THE NEW YORK COLOSSAL SHOW was at Lewisburg, Pa., during the past week, and opens in Catawissa on the 18th inst., for three nights, from whence it goes to Danville, Berwick and Hyde Park, where the show will close on the 30th. About May 1st it will re-organize for a canvas campaign, with W. Reed as contracting agent, and J. Wilson as advertiser. Ada Franklin, protean actress and vocalist, Chas. L. Howard, magician and comedian, and Tom Clannon, banjoist, will be among the company, the two former being at present members of the organization. A full orchestra and brass band will be a feature of the concern.

LITTLE VIC, only six years of age, who has a good wardrobe and a repertoire of specialties that is extensive for one so young, can be engaged, and Jennie Smith, comedienne and banjoist, is also prepared to accept engagements. They can be addressed care of this office.

THE HOWARD ATHENÆUM COMPANY, from Boston, seem to be rather unfortunate in their traveling campaign, slim houses being the rule.

BILLY PASTOR closes his season of nine months at the end of this week.

J. M. MORTIMER, variety agent, Philadelphia, Pa., whose card find elsewhere, is prepared to attend to the wants of managers and the profession.

R. FITZGERALD, variety agent, has removed his office, and all communications should now be addressed to him at the Tammany, N. Y.

AT THE VARIETIES, Pittsburgh, Pa., J. H. O'Neil, who is pronounced an excellent negro delineator by our correspondent, J. R. H., made his first appearance there last week. The Freeman Sisters have been re-engaged. Dan Morris was off duty a few nights through spraining his ankle in a dance, but was warmly greeted on his return on the 11th. Charley Benedict is the only one who has left the institution. Business is only moderate, as beautiful evenings and a circus have attracted in other directions. A grand military spectacle is in active preparation, and the forces are recruited this week, including G. R. Fortescue, low comedian. The receipts for March at this house were $3,505.

WE UNDERSTAND that there is a clause in the will of the late "Uncle Ben" Trimble, of Pittsburgh, which provides that after the expiration of the lease held by the present lessee of the Varieties Theatre, that place of entertainment will be finally closed.

Mmme. Irma was to open on the 18th, at the Howard Athenæum, Boston.

COMIC SINGERS, male and female, are wanted by Harry Hill. Address per advertisement.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE, Detroit, says our correspondent, "Frank," "Herr Holtrum's engagement closed on the 16th inst. He goes from here to Cleveland, for two weeks. On the 15th inst., he performed the feat of pulling against two horses in front of the theatre. The horses could not stir him, and in their effort to do so they broke the rope. His benefit on the 15th inst., was well attended. Emma Clifton reappeared on the 11th inst., but only for one night, as she was not well enough to continue. Bouman and Harris are as great favorites as ever, and they are always presenting something new. Billy Barry, in his song and dance, is encored from three to five times nightly. The Freeman Sisters and Ada Richmond, appear on the 21st inst."

THE ADELPHI THEATRE COMBINATION will start out shortly for an extended tour, with over thirty in the troupe, of which C. Amory Bruce will be advance agent.

THE COMPANY at present performing at the Alhambra, Virginia City, Nevada, consists of Joe Childs, Billy Cartright, Lizzie Hudson, Hattie Forrest, Ida Wallace, Ida May, Arthur George, Harry Spriggs, Theo. Jackson, Ben Cotton, Jr., M. B. Leavitt, Billy Blackburn, Geo. Wilson, Ada St. Clair, and Lizzie Lollar. A performance is given every Sunday evening, and the fine brass band plays on the pavement in front of the hall as the bells are ringing for church.

Negro Minstrelsy.

DEATT AND MINKLEY'S MINSTRELS, who opened at Kalamazoo, Mich., on the 5th inst., remained three nights. They did rather poor business, which was probably owing to not being well advertised. Their bills, which they sent on ahead, were delayed in some way, and did not reach there in time to be of any service to them.

BILLY EMERSON'S MINSTRELS opened at Kalamazoo, Mich., on the 8th to a $800 house, we are told. The company were repeatedly encored by the audience. Emerson's songs, dances and impersonations called forth the most enthusiastic applause.

THOMAS WALTERS, song and dance artist and general performer, advertises for an engagement.

OUR AUBURN, N. Y., correspondent says:—"Our amusement record for the past two weeks has been non est. Not a drum was heard nor a funeral note; why, yes, a funeral note, the death knell of the party known as Lamont and Dulaps' Minstrels. A misunderstanding between the managers and some of the performers caused the withdrawal of the latter, but the balance of the company, aided by some more home talent, gave a performance at the Opera House on the 9th inst., an inducement to draw an audience being a prize sash to be awarded the best jig dancer. Four claimants appeared, and the judges awarded it to Archie White. This did not suit the friends of the other jiggists, and considerable confusion ensued, when the audience quietly withdrew, and the entertainment closed."

AT HOOLEY'S Brooklyn establishment Prof. Silvester, in his supernatural illusions, assisted by Miss Angelique Schoit, has proven quite a card, and will remain during the current week, producing two new illusions, "The Enchanted Canopy" and "The Fashions of 1970." Griffin's burlesque of "Hamlet, the Sar-Dane," will likewise be presented, Billy Rice appearing as Hamlet, Archy Hughes as the King, and Fayette Welch as the Ghost. On Friday, 22d inst., Welch will be the recipient of a benefit. This, combined with the other performances, forms an attractive bill of fare.

THE MORRIS BROTHERS' MINSTRELS open in Bridgeport, Conn., on April 18th; Worcester, May 19th, and, taking in some of the intermediate towns, travel to Providence, R. I., where they open on the 23d.

SAM SHARPLEY'S MINSTRELS AND GIFT ENTERTAINMENT was in Lowell, Mass., on the 14th, 15th and 16th inst.

ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS gave two performances at Cleveland on the 8th and 9th; their houses were moderately good.

HARRY STANWOOD was recently presented by his Boston friends, upon his return to the Theatre Comique, with a handsome gold headed ebony cane, upon which was the following inscription:—"Sam Moseley and other Boston friends to Harry Stanwood, April, 1870." The presentation took place at the Parks House.

ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS gave performances at Detroit, April 13th and 14th.

IT IS SAID that Carncross and Dixey, of Philadelphia, intend to erect a building at Arch and Ninth, that city, for museum purposes.

ALLEN AND FETZENGILL'S Company played four nights and a matinee at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, commencing April 18th. Pettengill is not with the present party. He left them for home at Pittsburg, sick with consumption, it is said. George Edwards has played end buis in Cincinnati.

THE OLD FIRM OF EMERSON, ALLEN, AND MANNING are coming back to Cincinnati singly. Emerson's Minstrels are to open on the 21st for three nights, and Billy Manning has secured Wood's Theatre for the month of June.

ALLEN'S MINSTRELS play in St. Louis this week, and at the end of that time Billy Emerson will probably once more join fortunes with his old partner, under the name of "Emerson and Allen." At least negotiations are going on with that object, and will probably end in that manner, we are informed.

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS open at Columbus, O., on April 26th.

JOHNIE WEAVER, Ethiopian comique, and May Gifford, danseuse, advertise that they can be engaged.

NEWCOMB'S MINSTRELS showed at Music Hall, Taunton, Mass., on the 11th, to a light house, on account of a severe storm.

THE OPERA HOUSE, Louisville, Ky., has been occupied for the past week by Buckley's Serenaders, and the attendance has been remarkable, considering the season. In addition to the regular olio and variety entertainment, they present each evening a laughable extravaganza on some popular opera, introducing the original music, and then another feature is the assistance rendered by the prima donna, Miss Medora Becker. On Thursday, April 14th, there was a very fashionable audience. Mr. Swain Buckley's "Act of all Acts" was vociferously received. The clog dance, by Johnny Rice, produced pas encore. Peter Lee's burlesque ballad brought forth roars of laughter. The entertainment concluded with "La Somnambula."

THE QUAKER CITY Minstrels give a performance at Washington Hall, Philadelphia, on the 19th, at which Mr. Joe Mortimer will be a principal attraction.

Circuses.

CHARLEY AMES' CIRCUS is billed at Memphis for the 1st of May; he will do a fine business unless Old John Robinson runs in on him at the same date; if so Charley will fall next to the box.

FOREPAUGH'S MENAGERIE is billed for Indianapolis, Ind., April 18th and 19th and Terre Haute 20th. They are now travelling per rail, but will start out on wheels from Chicago as soon as the roads get in good condition. This shows the management's good sense in not using up the stock by long drives and heavy, muddy roads.

GARDNER & CO'S MENAGERIE left Connersville, Ind., April 9th for Ohio. The wagons and teams passing through Richmond, Ind., created quite an excitement.

THE AYRVOOD BROTHERS, the old Circus managers and performers, keep one of the finest saloons in St. Louis. It is near the Olympic Theatre, and is one of the head quarters of the showmen who visit that city.

GEO. F. BAILEY'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE will show in Bridgeport, Conn., on April 20th.

THE NEW YORK CIRCUS, L. B. Lent, Director, will pitch tent on the Ironistar grounds, Bridgeport, Conn., on April 19th, Waterbury, Conn., 20th.

FRENCH'S CIRCUS and caravan, re-constructed and enlarged for 1870, will commence their summer campaign as follows:—Brooklyn, one week, commencing Monday, April 18th; Williamsburgh, 25th and 26th; Hoboken, 27th; Paterson, 28th; Newark, 29th and 30th; Jersey City, May 2d and 3d.

A NEW PLACE OF AMUSEMENT.—Messrs. Spalding and Bidwell, knowing well the want of a light and cool place of amusement for the "cane's get aways" of New Orleans for the summer months, have at last decided to start to some use their large Paris pavilion, that they had made expressly for the great American Circus taken to that city by representative American managers during the great Exposition of 1867. This will be erected on the corner of Canal and Villery streets, and will be fitted comfortably with a view to give light performances during the summer, commencing with Noyes' Circus on Easter Sunday, 17th inst., in connection with the ariel artiste, Millie Tournour. After the circus, concerts, gymnastic exhibitions and occasionally a dance, will be given. There will always be a large orchestra in attendance. It is to be hoped that the arrangements will pay and last all summer, for New Orleans is very dull in the evening during the months of June, July and August.

FRENCH'S ORIENTAL CIRCUS pitched their tent in Fulton avenue, adjoining the Olympic Theatre, Brooklyn, last week, and were to make a grand entree and open a week's performance on Monday, April 18th. Equestrian and menagerie performances are among their specialties.

AMES' CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE, after a successful week in New Orleans, has folded its tent and taken flight to some other region. The performing animals of Mlle Eugenia are in good order and well trained, the lady exhibiting no fear in her demonstrations with them. Merr Lengal, with his performing tigers, leopards, etc., is also good. In the circus department, Miss Lucille Watson is the bright star, her scenes, both on the pad saddle and barebacked, are truly wonderful. Young Fred. Watson, the aerial equestrian, is also first class, as are both the clowns, J. A. Lawton and Charles Seeley. Miss Louise Bushell is another fine rider. In the gymnastic department, the Millsor Brothers appear before us as tumblers and on their horizontal bar, the latter being especially a good act. All the appointments of Colonel Ames' Circus are of good material, his seating capacity large, his attendants gentlemanly in their deportment, and he makes up one of the very best processions in the business. So writes our correspondent, "Crescent."

LENNT, LAKE & Co.'s OVERLAND CIRCUS opened the summer's touring campaign of the Pacific slope on April 9th, on the old Jackson street circus lot, San Francisco. The initial performance was to have taken place on the 4th, but the managers were not quite ready. On the morning of the day of exhibition a procession was made through the public streets. A correspondent, under date of April 8th, says:—"The street parade was quite an attractive one and the streets through which the cavalcade passed were thronged. First came John Wilson, the active manager of the concern, in a two horse wagon, leading the way, followed by the new and beautiful band chariot, drawn by eight richly caparisoned grey horses. The chariot is one of the handsomest ever made in America. In this chariot was the band in red uniform. Then followed the tableau car, perched upon the top of which was one of the performing lions; after which came the performers in four-in-hand phaetons, the den of lions, luggage vans, the trick horses and ponies and the Hedouin Arabs, richly dressed and mounted on horseback. Taken on the whole the display was a good one. Long before the hour for opening in the evening, Jackson street, from Montgomery to Kearney, was densely crowded with people, and when the four ticket sellers commenced to deal out the pasteboard, at fifty cents and one dollar admission, the confusion and rushing incident to getting within the pavilion is almost indescribable. In less than half an hour the fifty cent side was so full of human beings that the ticket office was closed against many hundreds who were clamorous for tickets. Then came the overflow on the dollar side, and at quarter to eight the doors were closed and over one thousand people turned away. The performances in the ring went off successfully. The Bedouin Arabs made a great hit, and received thunders of applause. Jule Kent met with a hearty reception, and his style of clowning appears to please the Pacific Slopers, it being so entirely different from what they have previously been treated to. The Rizarelli Brothers did their L'Echelle act, but somehow or other the act did not receive much applause. Whether it was because they could not get sufficient height and length within a pavilion or not, I cannot say, but they failed to make the sensation that was expected. They repeated the same act with like success two nights, after which the frame work was taken down and the three flying trapeze act substituted for the 7th inst., but, owing to the traps not being in readiness, they could not appear at all. An apology was made. They are announced to appear this evening (the 8th), and I think they will do much better in this act. The trick horses with this concern are among the best I have ever seen, and several of them do many difficult and pleasing acts. A six-barrelled revolver is fastened to the saddle, and at the word of fire the horse turns his head, pulls the trigger, and discharges the barrels one at a time. The Arabian mare, Black Bess, is a beautiful animal, and is well broken by Omar Kingsley. The boy Gonzales does a good somersault act on the pad, and the pony hurdle act by Master Gillian pleases, particularly the little ones. Young Ferdinand does one of the best three-horse acts I have ever witnessed. Robert Stickney does the best four-horse act (with Lent's New York Circus) of any man in the circus business, and I think Ferdinand's three horse act is the next best. Jule Kent makes lots of fun with his Hoss January. M'lle Franki does a pleasing act of equestrianism on the pad. She jumps over the usual number of garters and through many paper balloons. Omar Kingsley is the same dashing, beautiful bare-back rider that he was ten years ago, when he appeared in New York and made such an excitement as 'Ella Zoyara.' The dancing horse Oro Fino, introduced by Mr. Nelson, is another beautiful creature. The den of performing lions affords considerable amusement to the audience. The closing act is the 'Ride for Life,' by Mr. Williams, on the horse Argyle. He jumps bar gates, through balloons, and finishes by leaping a very high gate and through a large hoop, saturated with turpentine and all ablaze. It is a telling act, creating considerable excitement. The performance terminated at twenty minutes to eleven. There was another crowded pavilion the second night, but not so many turned away, owing to the coldness of the weather; the third night the tent was as crowded as the first. This concern expects to remain here four weeks, after which it starts for a tour through the country."

CHARLEY FISH arrived in San Francisco, Cal., overland, on April 7th, for Ryland's Circus.

CHARLEY PARKER, with his wife, reached San Francisco, Cal., on April 5th, for Ryland's Circus.

JOSEPH ROWE, an old time circus proprietor, is in San Francisco, doing nothing.

JAMES COOKE, the clown, was to leave San Francisco, Cal., for New York, about April 16th.

STONE AND MURRAY'S CIRCUS was at New Haven, Conn., on the 13th; they gave an excellent show, and turned people away at the evening exhibition. There is no concern that takes in the eastern states that has a better reputation than this show has; they have had the same route for the last four years. George W. Murray joined them on the 11th as clown, with Nat Austin and Stone.

LENT'S NEW YORK CIRCUS shows at New Haven on the 21st.

GEORGE F. BAILEY'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE opens for two days at New Haven, Conn., on the 25th and 26th. Fred Couldock is contracting agent for the Bailey show.

"UNCLE BEN" TRIMBLE, an old and widely-known citizen of Pittsburgh, and proprietor of Trimble's Hotel, in which the "Varieties Theatre" is located, died on the 15th inst. "Uncle Ben" was a firm friend to any one connected with a circus. During the dollar hotel breakdown managers in that business, in order to start them on their summer tour, and few of them ever failed to pay him again. Among the circus folks "Uncle Ben" stood high, and he was well known to the sawdust profession in all parts of the country. He would, at any time, rather see a circus, on a lot adjoining his Varieties, doing a good business, than he would his own show. The old gentleman was very eccentric, and there are many curious stories about the "Uncle Ben" favorites as the hero them about any other of Pittsburgh's old citizens. Those who had Ben. Trimble for their friend had a true one, and one whose loss they will deeply feel.

GARDNER AND FOREPAUGH'S CIRCUS has done an immense business in Pittsburgh. Our correspondent says:—"They charge but 25 cents admission to all parts of the canvas, which has the effect of drawing very large audiences to each exhibition. The show gives a pretty good one. Lyda Kenyon, the principal lady rider, and Chas. Madigan, the chief male equestrian, are both artists. Chas. Kenyon's educated horse, Ingomar, is a remarkable animal. His performance is among the most enjoyable features of the programme. Brown and Sanford are good gymnasts, as also is Madigan. The latter does a double somersault very neatly. The other members of the company are up to the average in their respective roles. The circus pavilion is commodious, and on the 15th, on which place some sixteen or twenty cages of animals will be consolidated with the concern."

JENNIE JOHNSON, principal equestrienne and tight rope artist, and W. C. Morgan, juggler, clown and general performer, can be engaged for the summer season. Address as per advertisement.

FOREPAUGH'S ZOOLOGICAL AND EQUESTRIAN AGGREGATION opened under its pavilion, in Louisville, Ky., on the 11th, both night and afternoon performance the canvas is packed. Our correspondent says "the animals look fresh, with the exception of the camels, which seem to crave an oat or two; the circus performance proper is not the very best; we think that if the managers would give the people more clown and less horse the murmurs would be silenced and the show pronounced first class. They go from here to New Albany, and Jeffersonville.

STONE & MURRAY'S Circus did not perform at Bridgeport, Ct., on the 11th inst., owing to the stormy day and evening.

GRADY'S CIRCUS were announced to show at Lynchburg, Va., on the 15th inst., and then march on through the Shenandoah Valley, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Michigan, in which State they will bring the campaign to a close and go in to refit and build new wagons, to be prepared for an early start in 1871. Charles Covelli has been temporarily absent from the show on account of sickness in his family, we are sorry to hear.

BILLY PASTOR has purchased the concert privileges of Thayer's Circus.

G. G. GRADY'S CIRCUS was reorganized and refitted at Danville, Va., and is now traveling north. A principal male rider is wanted for this show. Address per advertisement.

YANKEE ROBINSON is making every effort to commence his summer tour on the 1st of May, intending to start from Hudson, New York. His band wagon is reported to be a brilliant vehicle.

Miscellaneous.

SHROYER'S OPERA HALL, Newcastle, Ind., is advertised to rent for respectable entertainments. It is seated with chairs, has a private stairway to stage, &c.

MACKEVOY'S HIBERNICON has been traveling south during the winter, and is said to have met with success. The show opened in Newbern, N. C., on April 11th, for three nights. The following notices of the entertainment are clipped from the Southern papers, and from them it appears that Jerry Cohan and the other artists have succeeded in pleasing their audiences.—"HIBERNICON.—This entertainment of manifold amusements closed its exhibition last evening at the Theatre. A select and appreciative audience greeted the mottled canvas and the melodies of Erin, particularly the rollicking Hibernianisms of Mr. Cohan. As a representative of Irish character, Mr. Cohan equals any we have heretofore witnessed. He delineates the eccentricities and singular lightheartedness of this people with becoming tact and esprit."—Post, Wilmington, N. C., April 10. "THE ATRE.—THE HIBERNICON.—No amusement of the kind we have has been published to the amusement loving people of Savannah has excited more enthusiasm than the entertainment of McEvoy's pictorial and national representation of Ireland, as it is. The theatre was filled with men from the Lakes of Killarney, who feasted upon the dear remembrances of the 'ould' groves. Men from 'Limerick, ah lassies' too, who were delighted at revisiting, under favorable circumstances, old familiar scenes and spots. The evening was spiced with a number of Irish songs—the very best—and numerous personations of Irish character. Mr. Jerry Cohan is also well initiated as a character personator. He is a protean genius. He is a genius full of originality, sings well, acts well and dances admirably. His change of character are made with astonishing rapidity, and each one appears to be better than that which preceded it. It was rapturously and repeatedly encored. Marie Datti MacEvoy, as Nora, was a charming piece of Irish rustici, sprightliness and spriteliness. She has a sweet voice, sings with expression, and pronounces every word of her song so distinctly that the entire audience can understand it, as well as see it. She is singing. Miss Kate Halpine made a splendid old lady. As Mrs. O'Callaghan she was livy and entirely Irish, as well as original, and was charmy for one of her age. Altogether, the exhibition is a delightful one, one that ladies and children can see with perfect propriety, and one that they ought all be permitted to s."—Savannah News, Mar. 31.

SIG. EUGENE BLITZ gave a miscellaneous and sleight of hand performance at Lancaster, Pa., on the 14th and 15th inst.

MANAGERS of theatrical and other companies vising Peoria, Ill., are referred to the advertisement of Rose's Opera Hall, which has an ample seating capacity and appears to be in other respects well suited to their requirements.

"THE BLACK PROPHET" is the title of an original sem read by W. H. Pope at Faneuil Hall, Boston, on the 4th inst.

"PUBLISHING THEATRICAL ADVERTISEMENTS" in 49 local papers has been the text for a sermon of anathmas against them by a Jacksonville, Ill., worthy. His mon was, no doubt, to make his own pulpit notorious, de'il next denounce prayer meetings in theatres, no sbt. Charity. (?)

JUDGING FROM THE TONE of the appended article, hich we copy from the Hartford Courant, managers iting that city will not in the future be compelled to subit to the money-or-your-life demands of the birds of pr who compose its amusement committee:—

DEAD-HEAD TICKETS.—The following is the "dead-head" ill of fare for next week, as demanded of amusement managers F. A. Marcy, chairman of the amusement committee, as a part ose consideration upon which they will be permitted to give entertainments in this city:—

|---|---|---|---|
| Fechter, 14 tickets, value | $21 00 | Mrs. Scott Siddons, 14 tickets | $10 50 |
| Maggie Mitchell, 15 tickets | 10 50 | L. B. Lent, 48 tickets | 21 00 |
| Fanny E. Murray, 12 tickets | 9 00 | | |
| Side Show, 14 tickets | 3 50 | 126 tickets, value | $67 50 |

In addition to the above, the sum of $30 is exacted from entainments given at the Opera House and $175 from the circus companies making a total of $256 dead-heads for the season, or $2,560 ft. The money is supposed to go into the city treasury, less ten per ct, but the city derives no benefit from the tickets. It is no more than a share and levy. They are a contemptible swindle, and the sooner the amusement managers under the threat that if not on the license fee will be increased. The ordinance as first presented this committee, under the city charter, read that the "chairm of the amusement committee should be a member of the common ncil, and was so for a number of years, but upon that element F. A. Marcy, he got an amendment passed changing to "a mem of the board of aldermen." Now, what earthly object was there in ing the ordinance changed except to relieve free admissions to all certain. Some for this man and his friends! The business really too small for honorable men to be engaged in. It is to be hed, now that the citizens of the council had been called to it, that ery day evil at once. A petition will be presented to the ill next asking for the re-establishment of a reasonable license, for half shows one per cent of the gross receipts is enough, and lower cent from circus companies.

L. HOLMES GROVER, late U. S. Consul to Ancon Italy, after resigning his position in the diplomatic cor, has taken to lecturing upon his travels, which have on extensive, both in Europe and Asia. The following notices of the lecture are clipped from Trenton, N. J., pers, of April 11th:—"The lecture of Col. Grover, on Saturday evening, was largely attended, the audience being highly by the entertaining description of Europe and t Holy Land.—The Daily Emporium.—"Col. J. H. Grover's lecture before the Young Men's Christian Association was a very interesting production. His subject was 'Europe and the Holy Land.' His descriptions of Ireland were new and particularly graphic, and would have greatly interested the sons of the Emerald Isle. With the exception of Paris, the Rhine, and one or two points of interest in Europe, the lecturer passed briefly toward the eastern world. The most graphic descriptions of Mount Vesuvius and its surroundings, and brief descriptions of Messina, Malta, Alexandria, Cairo, and their vicinity, including glowing Oriental notes of Egypt generally, were given. The audience were then carried to Joppa (Palestine), the rocky hills of India, Lydda, Ramlah, Jerusalem, Mount of Olives, Bethany, Bethlehem, the Dead Sea, Jericho, Cana of Galilee, Tiberius, Druse Temple, River of Jordan, Damascus, Beyroot, Cyprus, Isle of Rhodes, Athens, Constantinople, the Danube, Pesth, Munich and many other points of particular interest, with brief yet interesting comments on each. He described the departure of emigrants from Ireland and other points for America, and recited some interesting and touching verses."—Daily State Gazette. "COL. GROVER'S LECTURE.—The hall of the Young Men's Christian Association was crowded on Saturday evening, and the audience well pleased. The subject—by special request—was 'Europe and the Holy Land.' Several laughable anecdotes of Ireland, France and Germany, with interesting comments upon Great Britain and Mount Vesuvius, seemed to particularly please the audience. The Colonel then carried them to Messina, Malta, Alexandria, Cairo (with Oriental notes of interest), Joppa, Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Bethany, the Dead Sea, Jericho, Cana of Galilee, Damascus and numerous other cities of Biblical interest. * * * The president then returned thanks and the entire audience reciprocated to Col Grover, and left, highly delighted and satisfied with the evening's instruction."—Daily True American.

A CARD.

BILL POSTERS, &c.
A person calling himself HARRY BROADWAY, alias HARRY CARPENTER, and claiming Utica, N. Y., as his home, lately absconded from my employment, taking with him, or disposing of a large quantity of printing, and borrowing various sums of money from Hotel Proprietors and Bill Posters, contrary to our express orders; is still, as we are informed by telegrams received by us, victimizing Landlords, &c., by claiming to be our agent. This person, hearing that we were on his track, telegraphed an unmitigated lie to the effect that his mother had died and he would return in three days. This was on Saturday, March 26th. Since that date he has carefully avoided us, and from telegrams which we are daily receiving we find he is still pursuing his old game.
We therefore
CAUTION ALL OUR FRIENDS
against this dishonest man, who signs himself
HARRY CARPENTER, AGENT NEWCOMB'S MINSTRELS, as we are
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR ANY DEBTS CONTRACTED BY HIM SUBSEQUENT TO MARCH 26TH, having paid all fraudulent claims up to above date inclusive.
1-1t* H. B. NEWCOMB, Manager Newcomb's Minstrels.
